The program represents 26 different tribes with our 274 identified Native American students. The diversity of our Native American population is unique, and our tribal affiliations lend and enrich our capacity for multi-cultural growth and understandings. Primarily, our goal is to collaborate and partner with our two adjacent pueblos, Ohkay Owingeh and Santa Clara. The department's mission is to provide a culturally-appropriate and responsive educational experience, while providing a quality education for the capacity and sustainability of our Native American students and their tribes, while providing and strengthening community, cultural relations, and understandings within the Española valley.

Indian Education Program, 114 S. Scraper St. • Vinita, OK 74301
(918) 256-2402 Fax 256-4199
Vinita Public Schools have two Indian Education programs that enhance the education of our large population of Native American students. Currently, the school system has 567 Native American students from the following tribes: Cayuga, Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, Delaware, Osage, Ottawa, Pawnee, Peoria, Pottawatomie, Quapaw, Seneca, Shawnee, and Wyandotte. Representatives of the Cherokee tribe make up 91% of this group. The first program, Title VII, is a part of the U.S. Department of Indian Education. It provides counseling for students, a school nurse, art instruction, an artist-in-residence program, funds for parent committee activities, and software and other supplies needed to enhance the education of Native American students. To be eligible for services under the Title VII program, parents must fill out and sign a 506 form with appropriate tribal information. The second program, Johnson-O'Malley (JOM), is administered through the Cherokee Nation and provides a home-school liaison, school supplies for JOM-eligible students, materials for special school projects, incentives for students who attain a 3.5 GPA or higher, Indian cultural and educational materials, band instruments, and funds for parent committee expenses. To be eligible for services under JOM, students must have a CDIB card.

Description: UAA serves over 2000 Alaska Natives, American Indian, and Native Hawaiian/Pacific Islander students. Graduates over 250 AN/AI students each year in over 25 degree programs. Campuses are located in Anchorage, Mat-Su, Kenai, Kodiak and Prince William Sound, located on the traditional homelands of the Dena'ina and Ahtna Athabaskan, Alutiiq/Sugpiaq, and Eyak peoples. The Alaska Native studies program provides the student with an introduction to Alaska Native and indigenous ways of knowing and seeing the world. The program emphasizes Alaska Native languages, cultures, politics and art, and provides an in-depth perspective on traditional and contemporary Native society. Students may select one of two areas to complete the requirements for the minor: a policy focus or a language focus. Both of these areas emphasize the dynamic nature of Alaska Native cultures. The Alaska Native Studies Minor provides valuable enrichment to any UAA baccalaureate degree. Anchorage is sometimes affectionately called "Alaska's largest village" and has been identified as the city with the highest percentage of Alaska Natives and American Indians in the United States; UAA offers a variety of Alaska Native programs, services, and opportunities.

The Native language education program trains teachers of Native language and culture, providing coursework in Athabascan, Inupiaq Eskimo or Central Yup'ik Eskimo. The certificate and degree are recognized by some Alaska school districts and serve as steps toward a four-year degree. Candidates for the Central Yup'ik option must score advanced oral proficiency on an oral proficiency exam before being admitted into the program. Minimum Requirements for Native Language Education Certificate: 30 credits; for A.A.S. Degree: 60 credits

The mission of the Native and Rural Student Center (NRSC) is to create a student-centered inclusive environment that honors diversity, celebrates cultural traditions and knowledge, and enhances the learning experiences of the University of Alaska Southeast students. Since 1996, the NRSC has provided a warm, inviting atmosphere filled with opportunities to gather with peers, receive academic support, and develop leadership skills. Eagle Totem Pole: The UAS Auke Lake Campus is located on lands originally inhabited by the Tlingit Indians. Tlingit, meaning "The People," are divided into Moieties, which means "each of two parts." There is the Eagle moiety and the Raven moiety. In March 1993, the UAS Auke Lake Campus was given a Raven totem pole. The pole was carved by four Tlingit carvers from Haines.

Description: The Native American Cultural Center is a visible and celebrated facility located in the heart of NAUs Flagstaff campus, which creates a platform for Native American and Indigenous cultures, traditions, perspectives, and contributions. Through the center, students can interact with peers, seek academic support, and feel pride in their university involvement, whether they are on campus or linking to the university through extended campus programs. We believe the NACC impacts the lives of all of our students—improving their academic, social, and cultural experience, and opening new ideas and possibilities as they step into their future. The 12,000 square foot facility houses activities that support student recruitment and retention, serving as a point of connection for Native and Indigenous groups and programs on campus and with Tribal communities. The center embodies Native values and symbolizes NAU's commitment to Native Americans. Our main doors open to the east, greeting the sun every morning. Like many traditional Indigenous homes, the NACC has an opening in the center of the building. The NACC also hosts a Story Room, which is specifically designed to accommodate our students' spiritual needs. Purpose: To enhance the visibility and standing of on-going programs, both academic and service oriented, their culture, issues and future prospects. Publication: Newsletter.

Northern Arizona University is unique in its mission to become the leading university serving Native Americans. The Office of Native American Initiatives (ONAI) was established to make this mission a reality. ONAI seeks to make a substantial and enduring contribution to a new era in American Indian self-determination by: partnering with Native American communities; collaborating with tribal colleges and universities; contributing to a culture of support for Native American students; building bridges to and from Indigenous-serving institutions across the globe. The Diné Institute for Navajo Nation Educators (DINÉ) is centered around 3 guiding principles: Diné and other Indigenous youth, teachers, elders, and communities are rich sources and sites of knowledge; Culturally responsive schooling is a best practice, and the DINÉ integrates Navajo traditional knowledge throughout all aspects of our teaching, learning, and leading; Initiatives that strengthen teaching through culturally responsive professional development will in turn improve the educational attainment of Diné and other Indigenous youth, which is a necessary component for tribal nation (re)building goals of sovereign Native Nations in the U.S. The DINÉ has three broad goals: Establish sustainable partnerships between Navajo schools and NAU that empower teacher growth and foster mutually beneficial cultural and content knowledge between the partners; Build capacity for culturally responsive, academically rigorous curriculum development and delivery among all teachers in Navajo schools; Enhance and promote teacher leadership and student achievement within Navajo schools.

Arizona State University is located in Indian Country; there are 22 tribal nations in Arizona. The Tempe campus sits on the ancestral homelands of those American Indian tribes that have inhabited this place for centuries, including the Akimel O'odham (Pima) and Pee Posh (Maricopa) peoples. ASU seeks to embrace our place, connect with tribal communities, and enable the success of each American Indian student. ASU continues to develop an impressive cohort of scholars engaged in American Indian cultural, social, educational, legal, and economic issues. We have built world-class programs in American Indian Studies, American Indian Legal Studies, and Indigenous conceptions of justice. The University is dedicated to supporting tribal nations in achieving futures of their own making. They partner with tribal nations to: address the ravages of paternalism; improve educational achievement of American Indian children, youth, and adults; create innovative and appropriate use and development of natural resources; conceptualize and implement responses to physical and mental health challenges; and build and strengthen leadership capacities to address challenges for Native nations in the 21st Century and beyond. And we will enhance and foster an environment of success and unlimited possibilities for American Indians at ASU.

Description: The minor in American Indian studies is designed for students interested in developing an understanding of American Indian issues and analyzing issues through critical inquiry. American Indian Nation governance certificate students develop knowledge and insight of government and governance in Native American communities. The curriculum covers themes ranging from the history, policies and sovereign status of American Indians to the legal relationships between the Native American nations and state governments as well as the U.S. federal government. Students completing this certificate program will be better prepared to work with Indian nations, federal and state agencies, and nonprofit organizations, regardless of their academic major or final career path. The BS program in American Indian studies provides students with unique opportunities to evaluate issues of American Indian nations within domestic and international contexts. The bachelor's degree program in American Indian studies encompasses two areas of emphasis: legal, policy, community and economic development; and arts, languages and culture. The American Indian studies program is committed to broadening the knowledge of students interested in the histories, languages, cultures, arts and contemporary situations of American Indian nations and peoples. The program is designed to protect the integrity and identity of the indigenous populations of North America and to create a learning environment conducive to critical and creative thought. The MS in American Indian studies is a trans-disciplinary program that provides students with an intellectual and practical understanding of the issues facing American Indian populations and the ability to apply that knowledge. Students acquire problem-solving skills useful in a range of professional arenas, including governmental, private and nonprofit agencies. The program focuses on languages, cultures, arts, activism, histories, legal policy and education from an American Indian studies paradigm and perspective. Delivery is through in-person courses. The tribal leadership & governance concentration explores traditional and modern concepts of Indian education leadership, tribal government leadership, tribal governments, decision-making and legislation, constitutional reform, planning, economic development, community development, nation rebuilding, tribal courts, administration and planning. The indigenous rights and social justice concentration explores the historical dimensions of colonization on American Indian political, economic and cultural institutions. Students will analyze the legal, political and social implications of American Indian relationships with federal, state and local governments and investigate processes that American Indian nations and community members use to strategize and work toward social justice and Indigenous rights. Facilities: Heard Museum; Pueblo Grande Museum; A.A. Dahlberg Memorial Collection of 9,000 Pima Indian dental casts and genealogies.

John J. Ross - William C. Blakely Law Library.

The San Manuel Band of Mission Indians has given Arizona State University $5 million as part of endowment for an Indian law program and to help renovate a historic downtown Los Angeles building used by the school. About half of the grant will go toward the endowment to support Indian Gaming and Tribal Self-Governance programs as part of the broader Indian Legal Program at ASU's law school. The rest will go toward renovating the 106-year-old Herald Examiner Building. Chairwoman Valbuena said the programs will help provide a means for tribes to achieve self-determination at a time when they're facing critical economic and governance challenges.

The Navajo Native American Research Center for Health Partnership's (NNARCHP) Student Enhancement Project (SEP)
Significant disparities separate Native populations from the health and health infrastructure enjoyed by the general U.S. population. To develop culturally relevant approaches to building healthy communities, more Native health professionals and researchers are needed for Native Nations to exercise their sovereignty including roles and responsibilities to achieve health equity. Yet, for aspiring health professionals on rural reservations, education and training opportunities are limited. (NNARCHP) Student Enhancement Project (SEP) will build and institutionalize the human infrastructure needed to conduct relevant evidence-based health research and essential public health services needed to improve the well being of Navajo people. SEP builds on Diné College's demonstrated ability to collaborate with institutions of higher education to enhance the Navajo Nation's professional health research capacity by training Navajo students, practitioners, and researchers. Using an "educational pathway approach" to resources within the Navajo Nation, the specific aims of this project are to: 1.) Increase the number of high school students familiar with health related professions; 2.) Enhance the Diné College Bachelor of Science degree in Public Health (BSPH) by developing local research experiences, upgrading Diné College's 10-week Summer Research Enhancement Program (SREP) from a sophomore to a senior capstone, gaining accreditation with the Council of Public Health Education (CEPH) and strengthening alignment with graduate level programs; 3.) Develop and offer a Northern Arizona University's (NAU) MPH degree with an Indigenous Health concentration tailored to the practice and research needs of the Navajo Department of Health, Indian Health Service (IHS) and Diné College, and 4.) to mentor AI post-graduate students. To achieve these aims, the SEP will leverage existing academic partnerships and coordinate with the NNARCHP's Administrative Core and Research Projects to provide educational opportunities: a) a service learning program for high school students; b) practicum experiences for Diné College bachelor level students and c) field based service and research opportunities within a MPH degree program offered through on-line and face-to-face courses on the Diné College campus. Evaluation of project impact will be tracked quantitatively, specifically through student enrollment, completed courses, degrees awarded, and qualitatively, through student voice documenting factors associated with academic success and application of learned skill sets.

CIEHR is supported by the National Institute of Health's National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences and the Environmental Protection Agency. The overall goal of CIEHR is to partner with rural and urban indigenous communities to build capacity to measure and determine the contribution of environmental exposures to health inequities and support efforts to address these threats, including research translation and policy development. CIEHR employs a community-based participatory research (CBPR) approach in its research and outreach projects.

Jameson studies Native American education using Indigenous statistics and has expertise in the limitations of collecting and applying quantitative results to Indigenous populations. As an Indigenous quantitative researcher with expertise in the limitations of collecting and applying quantitative results to Native American populations, he tends to examine research through tribal critical race theory which contends governmental policies toward Native American focus on the problematic goal of assimilation. This challenge often results in relatively low numbers of Native American voices in comparison to dominant culture voices in quantitative research, but can be overcome through increasing Native American participation in academic and policy discourse, and including Native American voices in quantitative research through Indigenous statistics.

Purpose: To protect and promote Indigenous peoples' rights. The new clinic combines the legal work, applied research, and clinical placements of the former Indigenous Peoples Law Clinic and Tribal Courts Clinic together under one faculty supervisor, with a focus on assisting indigenous communities and non-governmental organizations on a variety of legal issues and initiatives designed to support the improvement of tribal justice systems across Arizona, the United States, and the world. The Indigenous Governance Program (IGP), a partnership between University of Arizona Law's Indigenous Peoples Law and Policy (IPLP) Program and the University of Arizona Native Nations Institute (NNI), provides professional development, leadership training, and graduate education for individuals interested in a deep, practical understanding of indigenous governance and rights. IGP's nation building and indigenous governance curriculum combines the expertise of world-renowned faculty with data-informed research on what works for Native Nation (re)building efforts. IGP offers both in-person and online courses for tribal leaders & other professionals to collaborate on how to strengthen indigenous governance. Publication: IPLP News.

 Launched in September 2020, the office of Native American Advancement & Tribal Engagement's (NAATE) goal is to increase Native American awareness and increase the health and well being of Native American students, faculty, staff and tribal nations. NAI recognizes and acknowledges the contributions of Native Nations to the University of Arizona community and aim to create a physical space for the Center of Native American Advancement and Tribal Engagement and establish the School of Indigenous Governance and Nation Building. These initiatives will establish new processes and lead the university to becoming the leading institution serving Native Americans. Arizona is home to 22 federally-recognized tribes, and Tucson, where our main campus is located, is home to the O'odham and the Pascua Yaqui Tribe. In this context, fulfilling our land-grant mission of service requires that we strive toward building relationships with Arizona's Native Nations and tribal communities through education offerings, partnerships, and community service. We are committed to partnerships based in respect for the sovereignty of the tribes, and, through NAATE, we will establish a proactive, innovative, and transformational approach to all relationships with Native students, faculty, graduates, as well as their communities and families in Arizona and beyond.

The Native American Research and Training Center was established in 1983 by The University of Arizona Board of Regents to serve as a resource in health related research and training for Native American communities nation-wide. The Center is housed in the Department of Family and Community Medicine at the College of Medicine. The mission of NARTC is to provide training and technical assistance and to conduct respectful research to benefit the health and wellbeing of Native people, families, and communities. Because of our commitment to the realization of self-determination, one of the primary objectives of the Center is to promote active participation and partnership with Native American communities in all NARTC research and training programs. Programs: American Indian Research Center for Health (AIRCH); AIRCH is a collaborative project between the Inter-Tribal Council of Arizona (ITCA) and the University of Arizona (UA) to encourage practical research that improves the health status of American Indian people, increases the number of American Indian scientists and health professionals engaged in research, educates non-Indians about the need for culturally appropriate health research within American Indian communities and research institutions, and includes Tribes as stakeholders in the processes of conducting research on their reservations and in the dissemination of the research findings. The ITCA-UA partnership has been awarded three rounds of AIRCH funding, with projects in place since 2003. The Partnership for Native American Cancer Prevention (NACP); NACP is a collaboration between Northern Arizona University and the University of Arizona Cancer Center, funded through the National Cancer Institute. The mission is to alleviate the unequal burden of cancer among Native Americans of the Southwest through research, training and community outreach programs in collaboration with the communities we serve. Youth Wellness Program: The program invites American Indian youth from tribes across Arizona to a one-week intensive residential camp held at Whispering Pines, near Prescott, Arizona. The camp was established in 1991 to assist a growing number of Arizona's Indian youth who are at risk for or who have been diagnosed with type 2 diabetes. The program invites American Indian youth from tribes across Arizona to a one-week intensive residential camp where kids learn healthy eating habits and ways to make exercise fun, consistent, and habitual. All camp activities take place in an American Indian context, deeply rooted in culture. This integration increases our effectiveness, makes health fun, and places its practice within a greater American Indian history. Eight Arizona tribal communities participate: Hopi, Pascua Yaqui, Salt River, White Mountain, Colorado River, Tohono O'odham, Yavapai-Prescott and Yavapai Apache. These communities provide volunteers and transportation for the youth. The staff and faculty coordinate the camp and help organize volunteers who provide medical coverage, teach classes, and assist with fund raising. Project: American Indian Disability Legislation: Toward the Development of a Process that Respects Sovereignty and Cultural Diversity. Publications: Conducting Health Research with Native American Communities, by Teshia A. Solomon (Choctaw); Monographs; videos. Established 1983.

The office of Native American Student Affairs (NASA), originally named the Native American Resource Center, was established in 1989 through student and community advocacy. The Native American student population then was 434 (1.2%). Since the inception of the Center, the Native American student population gradually increased to 1,069 (2.7%) in the year 2009-2010. NASA continues to serve as one of four ethnic cultural centers reporting through the Dean of Students office. There are more than 75 Native American tribes represented on campus with a majority of students coming from Arizona tribes. The UA campus lies in close proximity to a richness of Native American cultures; 13 miles from the New Pascua Yaqui reservation; 6 miles from the Old Pascua Yaqui community; 10 miles from the San Xavier Reservation and 60 miles from the Tohono O'odham reservation in Sells, Arizona.

Indigenous Governance Database. Established 2001 by the Morris K. Udall & Stewart K. Udall Foundation The Institute provides customized executive education programs designed to equip tribal leaders with knowledge and tools for Native nation building. These sessions are based on the executive education programs widely available to corporate CEOs, military leaders, members of Congress and other officials. NNI has adapted this model to serve Native leaders wrestling with challenges unique to Indigenous community and economic development. For more than 20 years, researchers from the Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development and more recently, NNI have worked to understand the conditions under which sustained economic development can be successful on American Indian reservations in the United States and among First Nations in Canada. The results indicate that five elements are particularly important in successful nation building: Sovereignty. Native nations that have been willing and able to assert self-governing power have significantly increased their chances of sustainable economic development. Capable Governing institutions. The chances of sustainable development rise as Indigenous nations put in place effective, non-politicized dispute-resolution mechanisms and build capable bureaucracies. Cultural Match. Institutions that build and innovate upon Indigenous conceptions of authority fare better than those whose form departs from such conceptions. A strategic Orientation. Successful Native nations tend to approach development not as a quick fix for poverty but as a means of building a society that works. Leadership. In successful Indian nations, there is typically a group of individuals who recognize the need for fundamental change in the way things are done and can bring the community along with them in building that future. NNI's executive education sessions explore the research findings of NNI and the Harvard Project, drawing on cases from throughout Native America and around the world.

NPTAO provides a comprehensive program of university-based technical assistance, technology transfer and research, and educational opportunities for Native peoples across Arizona and nation; to administer economic and community development projects in indigenous communities throughout Arizona; to facilitate educational and research opportunities for Native peoples in a top-ranked Research One public university setting; administers a ten year applied research program providing research capacity building for tribal college faculty, staff, and students. THE OTR is responsible for strengthening partnerships and advancing mutual goals between the University of Arizona and Native Nations. In addition to fostering relationships with tribal nations, the Office fosters positive relations with tribal nations in key areas such as economic development, academics, cultural protections, and preservation efforts to achieve shared goals. The Office prioritizes raising awareness and developing an understanding of tribal governance, enterprises, culture, and customs among University administrators, faculty, & staff. RDI is responsible for advancing transformative excellence in research across campus, with particular attention to the land-grant mission of service to the State of Arizona. RDI enables the research success of faculty through supporting university research centers, institutes, museums and core facilities; providing research development, compliance and safety services; and securing strategic external partnerships. Programs: Teesto Chapter, Navajo Nation Community/ Commercial Land Use Planning; The Hopi Tribe EDA Mapping Project; I-MIG, the Tohono O'odham word meaning "kinship." a counseling service program; Navajo Nation and Hopi Tribe Tourism Enhancement project. The Indigenous Food and Agriculture Initiative at the University of Arkansas School of Law will encompass multi-disciplinary research, service, and education opportunities. To create new academic and executive education programs in food and agriculture, including law, policy, and tribal governance; To directly support Indian country by providing strategic planning and technical assistance, including research and publications in the following subject areas: Tribal Governance Infrastructure to Enhance Business and Economic Development Opportunities; Financial Markets and Asset Management, including Banking, Risk Management, and Stewardship of Land and Natural Resources; Health and Nutrition Policy for Tribal Community Wellness; Intellectual Property Rights and Protection of Traditional Knowledge. Annual Summer Leadership Summit: Native Youth in Agriculture. Fifty selected students will travel to Fayetteville to participate in a weeklong education and leadership summit designed to provide comprehensive training in the legal and business complexities unique to Indian Country land and agriculture. Students will engage in classroom & leadership learning, participate in cultural activities and receive specialized legal and land use education appropriate only to Native farmers and ranchers. All food, lodging, and instructional materials will be provided. Competitive travel scholarships to the University are available. First Nations Knowledge Webinar Series: A series of educational webinars created and hosted by First Nations Development Institute. The series aims to educate Native Americans who are involved in food-systems work and agriculture, plus those who lead or work for Native nonprofit organizations. Through the webinars, we hope to build knowledge and skills and, thus, Native American business and organizational capacity.

Mission: The Program is seeking American Indian, Alaskan Native, Native Hawaiian students who are interested and dedicated to the ideals of serving Indigenous People through the sciences. The purpose of the Indian Natural Resource Science and Engineering Program (INRSEP) is to provide academic and research support to underrepresented, low income, and historically disadvantaged students in STEM disciplines with a specific focus on American Indian and Indigenous students. INRSEP serves students by connecting them to research opportunities, providing academic and career counseling, assisting with entrance into graduate programs, and fostering an inclusive & supportive learning community within the INRSEP house. INRSEP is grounded in a holistic approach to STEM that accommodates diverse approaches to the natural world and draws from the traditional knowledge of Indigenous peoples. Courses pertinent to Native American natural resources (e.g. Native American water law, tribal government, and tribal perspectives toward natural resources. "We aim to work as partners with local tribal communities to learn from their wisdom and contribute to their goals. Our mission is to diversify and decolonize STEM fields by empowering our students to become leaders who give back to their communities, society, and future generations while strengthening connections with their heritage and culture."

The American Indian Resource Program (AIRP) in the Center for Educational Partnerships (CFEP) at UC Irvine provides a flexible array of institutional support services for tribal students, parents, and communities as they progress on their journeys through the various higher education systems of California, with a primary emphasis on accessing and navigating the University of California system. Mission: To assist American Indian and Indigenous stakeholders by pursuing, developing, coordinating, and initiating opportunities and experiences which assist Native American students in their assumption of leading professional roles in their selected disciplines. Beyond the ability to apply UCI credentials any where in the world, a critical aspect of student preparation is the retention of the ability of Indigenous individuals to contribute to the effective use and management of tribal community resources in a manner deemed culturally appropriate by their affiliated tribal entity; to give workshops to any K-12 educational institution, students, associations, and community organizations regarding American Indian related issues; to advise and assist departments on campus to develop appropriate American Indian curriculum and programs; and to provide assistance to staff in programming activities involving American Indian students. Program: American Indian Summer Academy (AISA) - A residential summer program where students work with professors, college students, and invited American Indian community members to develop interactive story projects that combine computer game technology with traditional American Indian culture.

UCLA Law's Native Nations Law & Policy Center is a national resource for the support of Native Nations. The Center successfully works to enhance Indian nations' laws and governmental institutions while advancing cultural resource protections. The Center harnesses UCLA Law's formidable academic resources and knowledge of tribal leaders to address important public policy issues. Our clinical programs offer invaluable applied training opportunities for students. We teach a Tribal Legal Development Clinic that provides legal assistance to Indian nations, and the Tribal Appellate Court Clinic, in the past, provided clerks to tribal courts including the Courts of Appeal of the Hualapai and Hopi Tribes. A joint J.D./M.A. degree in American Indian Studies offers an integrated program of study that produces law graduates with a rich understanding of tribal cultures. Publications. Purpose: To initiate, facilitate, and executes research by, and about, and with American Indian people with a strong focus on California Native nations. To preserve the history, culture, language, and sovereignty of California's first nations through research. Rupert Costo (Cahuilla) and Jeannette Henry Costo (Cherokee) helped found UC Riverside in the mid-20th century. In 1986, the Costos created the Costo Chair of American Indian Affairs at UCR, the first chair in the nation endowed directly by American Indians. Later, they established the Costo Library of the American Indian and Costo Archives, a unique collection dedicated to understanding the history and role of self-determination policy in Indian Country. Inspired by the generosity and vision of Rupert and Jeannette Costo, the California Center for Native Nations (CCNN) represents UC Riverside's ongoing commitment to research and service benefiting California Indians. In building upon the academic strengths of the university and UCR's unique connections with regional tribal leaders, the center's core activities address a central question: "How can tribal governments in California maximize their sovereign rights in ways that are culturally appropriate, economically sustainable & politically interactive?" The center also serves tribes by connecting them with the expertise found within the University of California to solve research problems unique to Native nations. The center focuses on unique and innovative research that leads to new interpretations that will influence the course of American Indian Studies. Activities: Conferences, Events. Publication: An Impact Analysis of Tribal Government Gaming in California.

The Native American Studies program is designed to provide a minor with a multidisciplinary approach to Native Americans through ethnography, history, sociology, and the humanities. By approaching the multiplicity of Indian cultures from a variety of academic perspectives, a deeper understanding of native societies past and present will emerge. The program is designed to present a variety of American Indian experiences and issues within the wider context of human history and evolution. The program is especially interested in providing teachers, community service personnel, tribal administrators, and interested persons with useful skills in dealing with this unique community. Special emphasis will be placed on assisting educators with practical and theoretical approaches to Indian education. Students in Native American studies are encouraged to apply toward the NAMS minor selected courses from history, anthropology, art, CALS, AMCS, and Education. Students may develop a special major in Native American studies; those interested should review the guidelines for special majors and consult the program coordinator.

Program: The Undergraduate Program in Comparative Studies in Race and Ethnicity; Native American Studies major and minor. Description: A division of Student Affairs, the American Indian and Alaska Native Program and its Native American Cultural Center provides resources & nurturing environments for Stanford's Native community. AIANP/NACC is the site of events, a headquarters for student organizations, the publisher of "ComingVoice," and liaison between local and National Native American groups, including Native Hawaiians. The Native Center hosts a variety of programs for students throughout the academic year. Each quarter, in November, February and May, Native American Awareness programming is spotlighted on the Stanford campus. Fall quarter programming may include Indigenous People's Day, Native Heritage Month, and a trip to the annual American Indian Film Festival in San Francisco. Mentoring within the Native American Community is the programming focus during Winter Quarter and may include visiting artists and scholars, college motivation days, and the annual Student Mentor Dinner. Native American Awareness in Spring quarter culminates with the Stanford Lu'au, Powwow, and the Native Graduation Dinner and Awards Presentation the night before Commencement. Stanford Native Community Annual Programming: Throughout the school year, the Native American Cultural Center (NACC) hosts and co-sponsors a variety of cross-disciplinary events from cultural practice to career development. These are initiated through diverse partnerships with student groups, academic departments, University programs, and community organizations beyond Stanford. Facilities: Stanford American Indian Organization (SAIO); Resource Center & Library. Publication: The Nativist, an online publication for creative writing, painting, poetry, photos, computer graphics, theater, and music. Activities: Annual Stanford Powwow.

The curriculum of California Tribal College will focus on the specific needs of tribal communities across California. Disciplines being considered include healthcare administration, business administration, management, Federal Indian Law, cultural and resource protection, and tribal governance. California Tribal College is designed to help Native students pursue and achieve the education they need to succeed and assume the role of tribal leaders advancing the cultural and economic welfare of their individual communities. Since 2015, California Tribal College has been offering certificate programs in courses of study of specific interest and value to Native students of all ages – from young tribal members to elders who are elected council members and chairs. To date, six Certificate Programs in Tribal Leadership and Governance have been conducted with a curriculum including instruction in subjects like Federal Indian Law and Policy, Tribal Governance, and Native Culture and Preservation. The response has been overwhelming. So far, 251 students from 60+ tribes have completed the weeklong program & earned certificates.

American Indian Student Services (AISS) welcomes students of all American Indian and Alaska Native heritages! AISS serves both students who are tribally enrolled and those who identify but are not enrolled in their tribes. AISS provides culturally responsive educational support: Resource Referral, Scholarship Information, Advocacy, Cultural Events and Student Clubs. CU Denver American Indian and Alaska Native students represent more than 100 different tribes. The Denver Indian Community is strong! Many families in Denver live far from tribal homelands yet retain tribal identities and cultures. Twenty percent speak Native languages. The Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Ute Tribes, located in the Four Corners area are the two federally recognized tribes in Colorado.

Description: NINLHE's Governing Council is comprised predominantly of Native higher education professionals from public and private colleges and universities. NINLHE is an alliance of higher education professionals committed to building strong Native communities by affecting meaningful change in higher education policies and practices that support and improve the educational experiences and success of Native students. Our Annual Institute provides culturally relevant and evidence based professional development in areas that enhance the knowledge of Native and non-Native administrators, faculty, and professional staff who work with Native student populations. NINLHE is a member of the National Coalition for the Advancement of Natives in Higher Education, a developing organization of Native and non-Native higher education student service practitioners and scholars who want to build a network to manage the relationship between higher education institutions and the needs of American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian students. It works to connect the strengths of member organizations to impact the overall Native student educational experience.

Mission: To transform higher education in the United States & Canada in ways that improve the experiences and educational outcomes of Native students, which includes Native American, Alaska Native, Native Hawaiian, & Aboriginal peoples; works to enhance the professional skills and bolster resilience of higher education professionals, both Native and non-native, responsible for improving Native student recruitment, retention and graduation rates.

Activities: Annual Summer Institute; Grant Awards.

Description: The Institute of Native American Studies at the University of Georgia was founded in 2004. It quickly established itself as one of the best programs in country. Today, we are a vibrant community of two dozen scholars, including six Native faculty, in addition to our graduate and undergraduate students. Institutes at UGA, just like departments, have three functions: teaching, programming and research. Mission: Central to the mission of both Native American Studies as a discipline and to INAS is the study of the indigenous peoples of the Americas from the perspective of the indigenes themselves. Our logo reflects our mission. The yellow circle reflects not only the hoop of existence but the life-giving sun, revered by the Mississippians, their Muscogean descendants, and the Yuchi in Georgia (as well as numerous peoples throughout the Americas). Within the circle is the name of the institute in Cherokee, written in Sequoyah's syllabary, the only internally invented alphabet for a Native language. Because both "institute" & "studies" are abstractions, and "Native American" a foreign construct, the title is impossible to translate with total accuracy. Reflecting our mission, we opted for "We Are Speaking Here." It is our intent to have Native nations and peoples speaking here through INAS. At the core of INAS are its undergraduate & graduate certificate programs. These permit students to earn UGA degrees in "traditional" disciplines such as religion, English, law, anthropology, or history (or many others), while developing an expertise in Native American Studies and demonstrating it through a separate credential. Resource: Archaeology Field School.

Mission: To assist students of color in meeting their educational goals.
Degree: Minor in Native American Studies & Nez Perce Language.
Lewis-Clark State College is located at Lewiston, Idaho, where two rivers (Clearwater & Snake), two cities (Lewiston & Clarkston), and two states (Idaho and Washington) come together. It is also where two peoples and two cultures came together in friendship and discovery – the Nez Perce Tribe and the Lewis & Clark Corps of Discovery. Founded in 1893, Lewis-Clark State is a public undergraduate college with a three-part mission of academic programs, professional-technical programs, and community programs. The Pi'amkinwaas American Indian Center for Educational Excellence promotes a positive learning environment that provides student support services and consideration to the unique cultural and community values of American Indian people. The center is respectful and inclusive of student representatives of all Nations. The goal of the Native American Club is to assist and promote all Native American students toward completion of a college education. Students participate in activities such as the promotion and planning of "Native American Awareness Week," fundraising projects, social and cultural activities reflecting Native American culture, encouraging higher education to local communities, and to provide student-to-student support. All students are welcome to be a part of the Native American Club.

The Native Law Program is focused on providing law students with a foundation in the interrelationship between Tribal Law, Federal Indian Law, and the intersection of State Law. The overview course, "Native American Law" provides a broad view of the field that offers law students an introduction into the foundations of Tribal civil jurisdiction, criminal jurisdiction, sovereignty, and natural resource management. This course offers a broad range of topics in Federal Indian law including the foundational cases, federal pre-emption of Indian affairs over state interests, federal delegation of authority to states, and the federal trust doctrine; and the basics of state law impacting Tribes, Practitioners also frequently guest lecture in the Native Law courses. Students complete skills training in a Tribal Court CASA program as well as the National Native American Law Students Association moot court competition. These skills are then solidified through the service of externships with tribal nations, tribal courts, public interest organizations, and state and federal agencies.

"What we are doing is taking away one of the financial roadblocks, which is out-of-state tuition and recognize the historic tie between Illinois with the American tribal nations," said Kevin Browne, vice provost for academic and enrollment services at UIC. In addition to aid, campus officials point to the Native American Support Program that has existed at UIC for nearly 50 years as an assistance to American Indian and Alaska Native students trying to fit in on campus. Currently, there are approximately 600 students at UIC who identify as American Indian/Alaska Native and multiracial. While historically the Native Americans indigenous to the region included the Potawatomie, Ojibwa and Odawa tribes, they were driven out of Illinois and the Bureau of Indian Affairs does not list any tribes in Illinois. Nearby states such as Wisconsin and Michigan each list at least a dozen recognized tribes in those states and Indiana also lists one tribe.

Undergraduate & PhD Minors in Native American studies. Opened in April 2007, the FNECC is administered by the Office of the Vice President for Diversity, Equity, and Multicultural Affairs (OVPDEMA). The FNECC serves as a gathering place for Native American students—a central hub for the Native experience at IU Bloomington. This unique space allows students to feel valued and find a sense of unity on campus. Students discover a safe haven at the FNECC, where they are supported, welcomed, and given the tools, resources, and opportunities to explore their cultural heritage and establish important connections to IU Bloomington and beyond. Offers unique activities designed to preserve and promote Native American culture and heritage. We also partners with some of the country's most influential and respected tribal leaders and scholars to provide opportunities emphasizing Native American traditions, ceremony, and storytelling. Committee on Native American & Indigenous Studies: Nicholas Belle (Center Director); Kelly Berkson (Linguistics); Serafin M. Program: NAIS Minor. Mission: Our goal is to educate & inform students about the Native experience that comes from the rich cultural heritage of the sovereign Indigenous peoples of the United States. Another goal is to create a department that collaborates with Native communities and engages students in nation building. The NAIS program introduces students to differences in the perspectives of Native American cultures on a wide variety of topics. Students gain an awareness of the diversity and multiple layers of humanistic knowledge within the framework of the North American human experience. Native American Studies undergraduate students have the option to support the student organization called the Native American Student Alliance (NASA) that provides and supports education awareness and program development on campus. Graduate students, staff and faculty work together to enhance the educational, professional and cultural opportunities for the Universities' Native American community through the Native American Faculty Staff Council (NAFSC). Resources: Native American Student Alliance (NASA). Special program: Certificate in Native American Studies. Instructors: Dawn G. Program: Certificate in NAIS: A certificate in Native American and Indigenous Studies enriches an undergraduate or graduate liberal arts degree by exposing students to North American tribal histories and cultures that are otherwise ignored in mainstream elementary, high school and college curricula. The courses required for the certificate help broaden the scope of students' understanding of United States history, with special reference to Native Americans' role in its founding, economy, Indian-white relations, and contemporary society. They also serve to make students aware of opportunities for further study and concentration in areas such as history, literature and the arts. The certificate in Native American and Indigenous Studies effectively complements degrees in professional areas such as social work, the law, education and public health, and better prepares graduates in those area to understand and address issues related to the American Indian people they will serve. Native American and Indigenous Studies, as a whole, provides an opportunity for non-Native students to become acquainted with members of various Native tribal communities which they might not otherwise experience. It also offers Native students a chance to enhance their knowledge and understanding of broad themes in the history and study of Native North America beyond their own tribal histories. The study of federal Indian law and policy, especially, will enlarge their understanding of their respective tribes' legal and political relations with the United States government. A number of courses from the departments of American Studies, Anthropology, Art History, English, History and Law are approved courses leading to a certificate or minor in the undergraduate program. Projects: A Search for Eastern Shawnee History, 1830-1945; Ioway City: A Walk Through Iowa City's Native American Past and Present; Iowa Native Spaces; Repatriation Files: Conversations on Native American Cultural Sovereignty. Special programs: American Indian Science and Engineering Society; annual powwow, student conference. Financial aid: Iowa First Nations offers resident tuition to members of tribes historically connected to Iowa.

CAICH began in 2010 as a National Institute on Minority Health and Health Disparities funded Exploratory Center of Excellence. Their mission is to improve the physical, mental, spiritual, and cultural health of American Indian communities and individuals throughout Kansas, the region, and the nation through collaborative research, education, and service. Their vision is health equity and equality for all American Indians. CAICH serves multiple purposes for both KUMC and the American Indian communities we serve. First and foremost, they strive to bring together researchers and American Indian communities for the purpose of conducting quality community-based participatory research to reduce health disparities. Community-based participatory research is mandated by the majority of American Indian communities for anyone wishing to conduct research with them. They provide significant assistance to researchers who do not have the experience or connections in the community that we have. Second, they enhance the image of KUMC in American Indian communities locally, regionally, and nationally through culturally appropriate programs and provision of services. Third, they increase the number of American Indians entering the health professions and health research careers through educational pipelining activities. Fourth, they provide services to American Indian communities locally, regionally, and nationally to improve health, health literacy, and educational attainment.

Haskell offers a BA in Indigenous & American Indian Studies. The Indigenous Nations and American Indian Studies/Social Sciences program is an interdisciplinary field that encompasses such fields as history, language, psychology, social work, sociology, and American Indian studies. Our program utilizes a curriculum that fosters a comprehensive and critical approach to the study and practice of Tribal Nation sovereignty and self-determination. Mission: To promote the values embodied by CIRCLE: Communication, Integrity, Respect, Cooperation, Leadership, and Excellence. The focus of the Indigenous and American Indian Studies Program is to prepare Indigenous, American Indian, and Alaska Native students for advocacy and leadership positions that promote and protect the sovereignty and self-determination of First Nations People; to provide students with an integrated foundation of interdisciplinary knowledge and the practical skills needed to contribute to the development of Indigenous, American Indian, and Alaska Native communities and Nations. Outcomes: Identify and describe Indigenous, American Indian, and Alaskan Native treaties, policies, histories, and sovereignty and self-determination; to promote relevant and community-based opportunities and solutions that contribute to the well-being of Indigenous Nations and American Indian and Alaskan Native communities; to prepare themselves for occupations in Tribal and federal government, social work, law, education, archiving and information management, information technology, and advocacy positions. Publication: The Indian Leader; Jared Nally, Editor

The Indigenous Studies master's degree program provides students with in-depth knowledge of Indigenous peoples' complex and diverse cultures and histories, as well as their impacts on the global society. Our multidisciplinary program offers students the advantage of studying relevant issues from a wide range of academic perspectives. The expertise of our affiliate faculty members includes Native American history, including medical and legal aspects; indigenous literature; ethno-botany; Indigenous peoples' cultural survival and political activism; American Indian tribal governments; indigenous geographies and cartographic history; Native American religions; and much more. The mission of the multidisciplinary Indigenous Studies Program is to educate students and promote scholarship about the complexity and diversity of Indigenous peoples' cultures and histories, and to provide students with the knowledge to understand and assess the U.S. tribes' unique relationships to the U.S. government. Indigenous Studies encourages appreciation of the contributions of Indigenous peoples to the global society, provides students with an understanding of the difficulties confronting tribal nations and offers foundational knowledge to assist them in finding innovative solutions to solve those problems. Resources: KU Powwow and Indigenous Cultures Festival (in April); First Nations Student Association (FNSA); Museum of Anthropology; Spencer Museum of Art.

The Center represents Indian nations and tribes & requires an understanding of the laws, history and policies that affect them. The complexity of "Indian law," and the lack of specific programs designed to educate graduates about the unique legal and cultural needs of Indian people, has created a situation in which lawyers representing Indian tribes place too great an emphasis on state law and federal law when dealing with Indian nations. As a result, these lawyers may unconsciously be contributing to the weakening of unique tribal legal and governance traditions by recommending the adoption of tribal laws and policies founded upon the Anglo-American legal and political traditions rather than the unique traditions of their tribal clients. Through its activities, the Tribal Law & Government Center at KU Law aims to equip students and legal professionals who will represent Indian nations with the skills necessary to appreciate & strengthen the unique nature of indigenous tribal legal systems.

We also act as a resource for JCCC students, faculty, staff and community members who are trying to better their understanding of these cultures, societies and ways of life. They welcome organizations academic institutes, Indian Nations, Indian communities and individuals (both Native and non-Native) who share our mission to seek to affect positive change in Indian country. The AIHREA scholarship is available to college students of any age, gender, socio-economic status, physical ability, and so forth who are seeking skills, a degree and/or a career working to improve the physical, mental, emotional and/or spiritual well-being of American Indians and Alaska Natives. While preference will be given to Native students, anyone, regardless of ethnicity, is welcome to apply. The AIHREA scholarship can be used at any community college, tribal college, four-year college or university in the United States. Any academic major is eligible to apply. The scholarship money can be used for tuition, fees, books & required class materials. The AIHREA Student Summer Internship Program allows high school, undergraduate and graduate students the opportunity to work on various community-based research projects with American Indian communities in Kansas and throughout the Plains region. During this 8-week paid internship, interns work with faculty and staff from both CAIS and the Center for American Indian Community Health at the University of Kansas Medical Center on research projects centering on American Indian health and education. Affiliated with the American Indian Health Research & Education Alliance (Website: www.aihrea.com). Design Team members: Brandon Roche, Blake Nofzinger, Matt Martiny, and Keri Sartain.

Description: The program, which is titled the 21st Century Library Alliance, is a collaborative effort between PSU, the nine Native American Tribes, 16 school districts with Native American student populations greater than 10 percent, and the American Indian Center for Excellence (AICE) at Northeast Oklahoma A&M. Goal: To enhance the quantity and quality of American Indian and American Indians serving Library Media Specialists in order to meet the information needs of the American Indian population in Oklahoma, Kansas, and Missouri. The schools that joined in a collaborative agreement are: Afton ISD, Bluejacket ISD, Commerce ISD, Fairland ISD, Grove ISD, Jay ISD, Ketchum ISD, Miami ISD, Quapaw ISD, Turkey Ford ISD, Welch ISD, White Oak ISD, Wyandotte ISD, Seneca R-7, Fort Scott USD 234 and Pittsburg USD 250. A primary focus of the grant is to provide 25 library media specialists with a specially designed curriculum that empowers Native American scholars. The focus is on how to provide services to Native American children and adults; to educate media specialists in the organization, management, and preservation of materials in 21st century Native American heritage institutions. This project will also provide a collaborative environment for these media specialists to work with Native American tribal members, who can encourage cultural change and ensure an unbiased climate and curricula in school libraries and classrooms. The candidates will learn the tribal culture first hand, establish networks, and in return bring the latest technology skills for preserving and locating current and past documents to the tribal libraries and museums." the beginning of greater collaboration between the university, the nine, et al.

Program: BA & BS with a minor in Native American Studies. Faculty: Britteny M. Howell (cultural anthropology, Alaska Natives). Resources: Museum of Anthropology; Kentucky Native American Commission; Kentucky Center for Native American Art & Culture. Native American studies has as its focus the prehistory, history, contemporary situation, and way of life of Native Americans (American Indians). The commonwealth of Kentucky is rich in Native American culture. NKU is located in the heart of the prehistoric Ohio Valley mound-builder cultures of Adena, Hopewell, and Fort Ancient, on lands claimed by both the historic Shawnee and Cherokee. The university is only about 50 miles from the soon-to-be-built Kentucky Center for Native American Arts and Culture and is recognized by the Kentucky Native American Heritage Commission. NKU's Native American studies program is the only such program in Kentucky. There are two Native American student organizations at NKU: First Nations Student Organization and Kiksuya. Native American studies minors are encouraged to participate in both. Each year NKU anthropology faculty present the Outstanding Student in Native American Studies Award. NKU provides students with opportunities to do Native American studies outside the classroom and develop résumé-worthy skills important in the job quest. Through Kiksuya, every spring NKU students can go to a reservation in the Dakotas. Every summer students also have the opportunity to participate in an archaeological dig at a prehistoric Native American village site in Northern Kentucky. Students also have opportunities to work on museum exhibits.

The institute offers a Federal Indian law course and a host of seminars and conferences, including the Louisiana Rural Economic Development Summit, All Roads Lead to Chaco Canyon, and the Tribal Courts and Tribal Sovereignty Symposium. Furthermore, the Law Center leads the charge as the first and only historically black college and university (HBCU) to have an institute of this magnitude. The Institute was created as a catalyst to raise awareness about Native American tribes and provide an outlet where they can receive educational, advocacy, legal and policy assistance. With the creation of the institute, the Law Center has established partnerships with multiple tribes including the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, Chitimacha Tribe of Louisiana and Tunica-Biloxi Tribe of Louisiana. At its September meeting, the Southern University System Board of Supervisors approved the recent partnership between the United Houma Nation and Law Center to provide assistance in obtaining federal recognition. The NALPI plans to expand with a fully comprehensive tribal law curriculum and continue to build stronger relationships with tribes that translate into more learning and employment opportunities for students. NALPI is the only Indian law program in the Southeastern United States.

Degree: A.A. Native American Studies, Humanities and Social Sciences. It is the first and only program of its kind in the state of Maryland. Scheduled to start in the Spring 2012 semester, the program comes on the heels of Governor Martin O'Malley's executive order formally recognizing the Native American Piscataway Conoy and the Piscataway Indian Nation tribes as a distinct people. The educational objective of this new program is to develop a greater understanding of the roles of Native American people, nations and communities both historically and contemporarily in the United States. In addition to providing a broad foundation in Indigenous cultures and current events, the program's curriculum in Native American histories, religions, literatures, arts and politics aims to generate knowledge and respect for Indigenous nations as well as foster critical thinking and socially responsible research.

The Five College NAIS Certificate Program is available to students of and comprised of faculty members at Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, Smith College, and UMass. Amherst. The program emphasizes the many long histories of Native American Indians as well as their contemporary lives & situations. A holistic & comparative interdisciplinary approach underlies the Certificate Program's requirements, enabling students to become familiar with the diversity of indigenous lifeways, including cultural forms, institutions, political economies, and modes of self-expression. In addition to this broader perspective, the program places some emphasis on the Native peoples of the Northeast so that Five College students can become acquainted with the history, culture and presence of indigenous peoples in this region. Facilities: Zoowie Banteah Cultural House - Crystal Allen, Coordinator (e-mail: allen21c@tholyoke.edu). The website is devoted to studying American Indians from sociological and related perspectives. We consider any of the broad and diverse topics of sociology to be within the purview of the website, but our current work is focused on three broad areas: Data and Methods; Schools, School Attainment, and Literacy, Identity, Language Use, and Naming Patterns. Although our time perspective includes both the past and the present, our current emphasis is on historical materials. We take national perspectives as well as regional and local ones. Goal: To share our research and to solicit comments, criticisms, and suggestions to improve and enrich our research products. To share our work at multiple steps in the research process, with invitations for readers to provide feedback.

Description: The Indigenous Law and Policy Center Offers one of only a few indigenous law certificate programs in the nation. Our mission is to educate law students and train lawyers to work on behalf of indigenous people & tribes throughout the country, whether for tribal governments, private law firms or non-profit organizations. The Indian Law Clinic represents the interests of tribes and tribal organizations. The Clinic has two areas of focus—the Tribal Governance Project and the ICWA Appellate Project. Both projects are committed to working with tribes to support tribal self-governance and nation building. Supporting and promoting tribal self-governance requires a thorough understanding of the tribal court systems and the relationship between tribes, states, and the federal government. Students in the Indian Law Clinic receive education in both areas through their projects with tribes and assigned reading.
The ICWA Defense Project, funded primarily by Casey Family Programs, is a founding member of the ICWA Defense Project, a coalition of national groups committed to the defense and preservation of the Indian Child Welfare Act.
Congress passed the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA) to stop the wholesale removal of American Indian and Alaskan Native children from their families. Despite ICWA, Native children today are still 2.5 times more likely to end up in foster care than other populations. We're at the forefront of the fight to keep Native children with their families and tribes. Special programs: Spring Speakers Series, new books in Indian law; Annual Conference. Resources:
Annual Indigenous Law Conference in November; Committee on Institutional
Cooperation American Indian Studies Consortium; EAGLE American Indian

American Indian Studies Minor, within Global, Cultural & Language Studies, St. Scholastica offers Ojibwe language courses. These classes seek to teach students the Ojibwe language while they learn about various aspects of both modern and traditional Ojibwe culture. A significant amount of time and effort is spent learning about traditional Ojibwe subsistence activities, while also becoming aware of more modern practices for subsistence harvests. Rather than the more traditional structural approach that focuses on grammar, these Ojibwe language courses are centered around developing communicative abilities and developing the competency to actually use the language in speech and writing. Faculty: Elyse Carter-Vosen (Ojibwe language & culture). Resources: Indigenous Students' Alliance. Courses: Ojibwe History & Philosophy, et al.

American Indian Studies (AIS) is an interdisciplinary academic department offering coursework committed to broadening knowledge of the worldview, histories, languages, literatures, cultures, arts and contemporary experiences of American Indian nations and peoples. As American Indian nations maintain a distinct political relationship with the federal government rooted in historical treaties, congressional laws, and executive orders, AIS promotes an awareness for and understanding of tribal sovereignty and self-determination. AIS strives to protect the integrity and identity of the indigenous population of North America and to create an intellectual learning environment conducive to critical and creative thought. Program Description: BA and Minor in American Indian Studies; Works to prepare American Indian students for careers in professional fields including teaching, medicine, social work, and business administration. Programs: American Indian Teacher Training Program; Master of Social Work program with a special focus on American Indian communities; Tribal Administration and Governance Program (BA and MA). Resources: American Indian Learning Resource Center; Center of American Indian and Minority Health; Center of Excellence for American Indian Medical Education.

Mission: To provide support for American Indian and other underrepresented minority students who are pursuing or possess an interest in health careers. Programs: Designed to boost interest and knowledge base concerning American Indian health; Native Americans into Medicine (NAM) program. The NAM program exists to the current day and Native American students continue to learn and grow through their participation in it. CAIMH and the UM Medical School continue their dedication to training Native American physicians and healthcare providers. Programs and outreach efforts have expanded to students of all levels of education, encouraging them to consider careers in medicine or health care. In addition to its NAM program, CAIMH was one of the three original Health Resources & Services Administration (HRSA) Native American Center of Excellence (COE) programs funded from 1991 to 2005. CAIMH currently offers opportunities for high school, undergraduate and medical students through its Health Careers Opportunity Programs project. The HCOP project includes a partnership with Bemidji State University to provide outreach and advisement for American Indian undergraduate students in northwestern Minnesota. CAIMH is home to the Indian Health Service Indians into Medicine (INMED), a project that provides funding and services for American Indian students from the Kindergarten to high school levels and partnerships with INMED area Native American communities. This project also partners CAIMH with Bemidji State University in providing summer experiences for high school students, including the BSU INMED program. A partnership with the Fond du Lac Band of Lake Superior Chippewa allows us to offer additional programming for high school students. For the past 40 years, CAIMH and the UM Medical School have encouraged and supported Native American students of all educational levels as they explore and pursue their health career goals. CAIMH recognizes importance of creating a learning environment where Native American students can maintain community and cultural ties and how this prepares them to provide high quality health care for Native American communities.

Description: Offers a Minor in the program that promotes awareness of native cultures and peoples in the U.S. through an examination of the ways in which traditional Native cultures have persisted and adapted over time and how these cultures are expressed in present-day life and affairs. Focuses on the Dakota people of Minnesota specifically. The interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary nature of INDS will be illustrated by analytical concepts, methodologies, and contributions from key fields and disciplines such as anthropology, history, literature, and art. In a society and world characterized by diversity and multiculturalism, INDS serves both native and non-native students by broadening their knowledge of traditional and modern native history and culture. Decolonization provides both the theoretical framework and pedagogy for Indigenous Nations & Dakota Studies. Resources: Oyate Club; Library. Awards, honors: 2019 recipient the Cowan Award.

(612) 330-1523; Elise Marubbio, Director

E-mail: marubbio@augsbu.edu

Dr. Marubbio started the Augsburg Native American Film Series in 2003 as an extension of her work in American Indian Studies and her love of the arts. She visualizes the series as a project committed to affecting the world through artistic collaboration and powered by a belief in the film to inform, affect, and stimulate vastly different groups of people. The festival's goals include the following: To offer a regional venue for Native American filmmakers to present their films and to engage other communities in dialogue about the films, the process of working as a Native American filmmaker, and the politics of ethnic-identified film making; To build a collaborative relationship with the local Native American community that honors the rich tradition of Native American film in Minneapolis; Provide an interactive environment within which students and community participants critically engage with the tough issues raised by many Native filmmakers about America's history, our contemporary culture, and social justice; To provide reservation communities with access to films by and about Native peoples.

Brooke Hornseth (Brothertown Indian Nation), Program Coordinator

Brooke has extensive experience working with families, adults, and youth to provide crisis response services, mental health advocacy, case management and the development of programming to keep youth and families connected with their communities. In her work, Brooke emphasizes the positive impact that connection with an individual's tribal community has not only with regard to their wellness, but the wellbeing of the community as a whole. In addition to her work with students and families, Brooke has pursued additional training in traditional American Indian parenting, crisis prevention, crime victim advocacy, and health and wellness education for tribal communities. Brooke's personal interests include beading, fishing, camping and spending time with family. She is always happy to share those interests with those who are hoping to learn a new hobby or skill and has facilitated beadwork and quilting groups for youth and young adults to help support positive connections within communities.

The Native American Community Development Institute (NACDI) was founded in 2007 to address the growing challenges and opportunities facing the urban Indigenous community. Based in Minneapolis, Minnesota, NACDI celebrated 10 years of service in 2017. Poised to grow as NACDI begins its second decade, we know we will see more changes in the next 25 years than we have experienced over the past 100. To thrive in the midst of global change, the American Indian community must be unified and agile, work in partnership, eliminate deficit-driven methods, and invest in comprehensive asset-based strategies. NACDI is committed to transforming the American Indian community to effectively respond to 21st-century opportunities. NACDI works to promote innovative community development strategies that strengthen the overall sustainability & wellbeing of American Indian people and communities.

Programs: Native American & Indigenous Studies, major/minor; Anishinaabe language instruction. Project: Native American Student Success project; American Indian Science & Engineering Society chapter. Faculty of American Indian heritage teach courses in Dakota and Ojibwe languages—funded in part through the efforts of our American Indian Advisory Committee—as well as literature and history courses with a contemporary focus. Today more than 300 American Indian students comprise more than 18% percent of the Morris student body. In Minnesota and nationwide, Native students comprise just 1-2% of students at four-year colleges. Morris is the only four-year college in the upper Midwest qualifying for federal designation as a Native American Serving Non-Tribal Institution (where at least 10% of students are American Indian). The Morris campus is situated on original Anishinaabe (Ojibwe) and Dakota and Lakota (Sioux) homelands. The campus was founded in 1887 as a Native American boarding school. When the US Bureau of the Interior turned over the building and lands of the boarding school to the State of Minnesota in 1909 to establish the agricultural boarding high school (1910–63), it was with the stipulation that American Indian students would be admitted on the same conditions as other students, and tuition-free. The University of Minnesota Morris is located on land that was once an Indian boarding school. These were schools built around the country that housed young Native American children who were sometimes stolen from their parents. Annual Powwow.

Description: The Red Lake Nation College (RLNC) was chartered by the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in 2001 to provide higher education opportunities for Tribal members living on and near the Red Lake reservation. Prior to the opening of Red Lake Nation College, Red Lake members were forced to drive two hours round-trip daily in order to attend college. The rural location of the reservation, the high cost of transportation, and daycare costs were all huge barriers to attending college for Tribal Members. In the Fall of 2017, RLNC enrolled 146 students to start the semester. More than 90% of these students would not be in college if the RLNC were not in existence. The Red Lake Nation College is currently a candidate for accreditation with the Higher Learning Commission. Goals: Our main goals are to provide an excellent, culturally relevant higher education that also prepares our students for the 21st-Century job market. During their education at RLNC, students will develop not only a positive sense of pride in their Ojibwe culture and identity, but also, the confidence and academic skills needed to succeed at higher levels of education.

Degree: Native American Studies minor. Description: The Native American Studies Program is an interdisciplinary minor course of study allowing students to concentrate on the history, arts, and cultures of native peoples of the Americas. The minor in Native American Studies offers a multidisciplinary exploration of the history, arts, and cultures of the first Americans, past and present. The minor will stimulate awareness and appreciation of the ethnic and cultural diversity of the United States, which is an increasing concern in the workforce and society today, as well as the importance of cultural heritage.

The Center was proposed with the vision of educating a new generation of Native American students in entrepreneurship for the future that will enable them upon graduation to start their own businesses or secure well-paying employment to strengthen the economic foundations of their reservation communities. The CETEE concept is developed by the Salish Kootenai College (SKC) with the aim of promoting access and participation to entrepreneurial higher education, and contribution by Native American students to their peoples and nations. The aim of the CETEE is to service the 36 Tribal Colleges and Universities (TCU's) and approximately 30,000 full and part-time students in the American Indian Higher Education Consortium (AIHEC). We will be offering academic and community-based programming to the other TCU's to enable them to provide entrepreneurial education for their students. SKC believes that students educated by CETEE will contribute to the critical diverse workforces necessary for reservation-based tribal enterprises and US businesses to succeed, thereby expediting the strategic mission of MBDA for the greater USA. The proposed Phase 1 plan will support the engagement of the leadership and faculty of the AIHEC TCU network, agencies, and institutions supporting sovereign nations. Funding is requested for Site Visits and Assessments of current capabilities of the TCU's and Agencies for entrepreneurship education, as well as organizing and holding a conference of participating stakeholders for the purpose of planning the proposed CETEE.

The Native American Association (NAA) office is in the Student Cultural Center, Office of Multicultural Affairs in Harper Center suite #1001. NAA executives have their organizations' office, executive meetings, and group meetings in this space. On this resource website you will find information about the History of Native Americans at Creighton, current Native Americans at Creighton, information for future and current Native American students, resources across campus, community/city resources and more. The Creighton University Native American Association (NAA) enhances, supports, and maintains the Native American culture within the Creighton community. Our goals are to enhance communication and diversity between Native American and non-Native American students at Creighton and members of the surrounding community, and incorporate cultural values into our educational experience. The Association fosters fellowship and serves as a supportive foundation for students. We encourage all students at Creighton University to join the NAA and invite the community to participate in our events.

Description: The program is interdisciplinary, combining the efforts of faculty throughout the University. Native American Studies offers students an opportunity to learn about Native American Cultures - literature, history, arts, values, lifeways, spirituality, and social and political institutions. The program also has a long-standing tradition of activism on contemporary issues. Native American Studies introduces students to differences in the perspectives of European-American and Native American cultures on a wide variety of topics, including issues relating to communication across the cultural boundaries of both past and present eras. Students gain an awareness of humanistic knowledge within the framework of North American human experience. Some students are of Native American descent, but many are not. Classes often are taken by students from a number of fields to satisfy cultural-diversity requirements. Students also include NAS courses in programs leading to degrees in medicine, law, education, public administration, social work, and criminal justice. Native American Studies graduates have formed an association to assist in the promotion of Native American Studies. Contact the UNO Native Studies Office for information about Native American Studies Alumni Association. Resources: American Indian Student Council; annual Powwow. Established 1992.

The American Indian Digital History Project is a Digital History Cooperative founded to recover and preserve rare Indigenous newspapers, photographs, and archival materials from all across Native North America. The project seeks to increase access to historical Tribal documents in order to encourage accurate and responsible American Indian research. Furthermore, the project will be seeking partnerships with Tribal governments and archives to create a digital repository for local Tribes. Mission: This innovative digital project is a cooperative partnership between the University of Kansas, the University of Nebraska at Omaha (UNO), Tribal communities, Tribal Colleges, Native organizations, Libraries, Universities/Colleges, and the larger public. The American Indian Digital History Project (AIDHP) was founded to forge digital partnerships with Native Nations and Indigenous communities located throughout the surrounding region of Nebraska with the intent of expanding the project nationally. This digital cooperative will start with digitizing key primary source documents like Akwesasne Notes and will make these sources free, searchable, and accessible to the greater public. AIDHP works partnership with Native peoples and communities to promote the recovery, sharing, preservation, and protection of rare Tribal archival and primary source materials. AIDHP and a host of public and private institutions will greatly benefit from this expanding partnership of shared archival sources that can better inform scholarship and research about Indigenous peoples. Goals: They are interested in partnering with other institutions to digitally archive rare 20th and 21st Century primary sources. To encourage responsible American Indian research methods and the increased use of Native source materials. With increased access to Native sources increases accountability and attempts to raise the bar on academic and public research on or about Indigenous peoples. Kent Blansett's latest manuscript is entitled A Journey to Freedom: The Life of Richard Oakes, 1942-1972 which is under consideration for the Henry Roe Cloud Series on American Indians and Modernity with Yale University Press. Once published, this will be the first biography of Akwesasne Mohawk activist Richard Oakes, who played a major role in the famed 1969 Alcatraz Takeover by the organization Indians of All Tribes. For his first manuscript, Blansett has collected research material from over twenty University and Tribal libraries from New York to California as well as numerous oral interviews with key Tribal leaders. His research has received wide publication appearing in several edited volumes, academic journals, and online with BlogWest and Indian Country Today.

Mission: To develop interdisciplinary teaching and research and increase understanding of the historical experiences, cultural traditions and innovations, and political status of Indian peoples in the U.S. and Canada. Structure & Responsibilities: The Native American Program provides Native American student support services; works with students, administrators, campus-wide faculty and programs to insure the success of Native American students through their four-year residency on campus; strives to provide spiritual, emotional, personal support, and tutorial help -- often times on an individual basis -- to insure the success of all Native students. NAP works to increase understanding of native issues both on campus and beyond. Student graduation rates have grown significantly since the inception of the Native American Program in 1972. During the first decade of the program's existence, the Native student graduation rate averaged 50%; since then the average has risen to 72%, nearly ten times the average graduation rate for Native Americans attending college nationwide. Currently, 120 Native American students are enrolled. Affiliated College Officials: Jim Larimore, Comanche (Dean of the College); Colleen Larimore, Comanche (Support Services in First Year Office); Michael Hanitchak (Choctaw); The Native American House (a residential house for 16 upper class Native American students, and a central meeting and cultural activities center for students); Lori Alvord Arviso, Navajo (Assistant Director of Admissions, Dartmouth Medical School, surgeon, Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center). Special programs: Native American Program (see below); Angela K. Parker, Mandan-Hidatsa (Admissions Recruiter for Native American students); Horizons Program and Native American Fly-In (Native American high school seniors come to Dartmouth in a group for a visit, all travel expenses paid for by the College, submit application to admissions office); Charles Eastman Fellowship (annual residential fellowship for Native scholars writing PhD dissertations, $25,000 salary, office support, $2,500 expense account; Class of 1943 Tribal Research Fellowship, up to $8,000). Activities: Conferences and symposia addressing current issues in Indian country, historical perspectives, religious traditions, education, material culture, language, sovereignty; Internship program, seniors majoring in NAS go on term-long internships in Indian country or Washington, DC; Annual Dartmouth College Powwow (usually held the Saturday before Mother's Day each Spring); annual guests, lectures, Talking Circle, cultural events to promote understanding. Affiliates: Native American Council (NAC), meets four times each term; Native American Visiting Committee (NAVC) alumni review committee, annual meetings and report; Native Americans at Dartmouth (NAD), student organization, sharing affinity and student life; Native American House (affinity residence house for Native American students and non-Native students interested in sharing cultural life); NAAA (Native American Alumni Association); alumni group at Dartmouth College with over 500 members. Honors Program: Students may become honors majors in NAS upon application and a GPA of 3.00 or higher. Facilities: Native American Studies Center includes a research library (over 5,000 books, many newspapers, periodicals, tribal publications, language research project archives); Baker Library, main college library has excellent and broad collections on American Indian ethnography, history and contemporary life, art, material culture; Hood Museum of Art (collections of American Indian art, artifacts, and cultural objects).

 In the Southwest Indian Law Clinic (SILC), student attorneys represent Native clients in state, federal, and tribal courts and in governmental agency hearings. Students also have the opportunity to work with tribes, pueblos, and organizations serving the Native American community. SILC faculty emphasize community involvement and sensitivity, collaborative lawyering, and multi-disciplinary problem solving. Indian Law is a prerequisite for the Southwest Indian Law Clinic. SILC is a required component of the Indian Law Certificate Program.

Being one of four regional sites, the Crownpoint Center serves Eastern Agency through higher education as well as support services to community needs. Our main academic focus is to provide an education that will allow students to transfer to other colleges and universities throughout New Mexico and Arizona, including Ft. Lewis College in Durango, Colorado. The Crownpoint Library provides community services such as Internet access and data gathering through library collection, and workshop trainings in computer usage. With Gallup, NM (55mi), Farmington, NM (82 mi), and Albuquerque, NM (125 mi) surrounding Crownpoint. Our institution serves as the gateway to historic Chaco Canyon (40 mi). Academically, our students choose to improve their educational needs by completing their studies in Liberal Arts, Social & Behavioral Sciences, and Business Administration as well as the general education requirements within New Mexico, all focused on a long term plan to achieve a bachelor and master degree. Diné College also works with NN Workforce in creating a successful GED program for the community with testing done through the Shiprock ABE Program. See Dine College listing under Tsaile, AZ

Navajo Technical University-Pueblo of Zuni to begin in the 2019 Spring semester and will offer courses in counseling, construction technology and early childhood education. The extension of NTU's services to the Pueblo of Zuni also opens up higher education opportunities to rural communities in the southern portion of the Navajo Nation's Eastern Agency. The communities of Ramah, Vanderwagon, Manuelito, Breadsprings, RedRock, and Chichiltah are expected to have representation at the site. The additional site presents the likelihood for the Pueblo of Zuni to eventually adopt the campus as their own tribally controlled educational institution and eventually join the 37 tribal college and universities recognized by the American Indian Higher Education Consortium. Navajo Technical University and Diné College work together to promote higher education on the Navajo Nation through a joint-effort titled, "One Nation Dedicated to Higher Education." The collaboration seeks to raise awareness about the benefits of attending a tribal college or university, while advocating for local, state, federal, and tribal support that could lead to the long-term success for each institution. Seven Navajo Technical University students experienced summer internships and work opportunities with NASA to develop a better understanding of their respective field of study. Internship opportunities between NTU and NASA have been an ongoing collaboration for the past decade, and have grown in sophistication since NTU has expanded its academic offerings to include four year degrees and programs with national accreditations, such as its engineering programs and ABET.

Program: American Indian Studies Minor. Provides an interdisciplinary study of the anthropological, historical, cultural, educational & political developments that have formed present-day Native America. The program is designed for students with the desire to better understand American Indian and Alaskan Native cultures by studying pre-contact history via oral tradition, post-European contact via biography, and present day "Indian Country" through federal policies, films, and literature. American Indian ethnic identities and stereotypes, as formed by these media, will be studied to promote new ways of thinking about race and culture. The multi-disciplinary nature of the minor allows for participation from students of all backgrounds in developing a new view of American Indian cultures while helping to dispel the Pan-Indian stereotype endemic in the American education system.

Founded in 1999, the Center for the Study of Ethnicity and Race (CSER) at Columbia University is a vibrant teaching, research, and public engagement space. Mission: to support and promote the most innovative thinking about race, ethnicity, indigeneity and other categories of difference; to better understand their role and impact in modern societies. What makes CSER unique is its attention to the comparative study of racial and ethnic categories in the production of social identities, power relations, and forms of knowledge in a multiplicity of contexts, including the arts, social sciences, natural sciences, and humanities; To promote its mission, the Center organizes conferences, seminars, exhibits, film screenings, and lectures that bring together faculty, as well as undergraduate and graduate students, with diverse interests and backgrounds. CSER partners with departments, centers, and institutes at Columbia and works with colleagues and organizations on campus and off campus in order to facilitate an exchange of knowledge.

One of the priorities of the global movement of indigenous women is the training, strengthening and building of capacities in order for indigenous women to have the tools they need to defend and claim their rights, as well as to be better prepared for decision-making in various spaces. The Global Leadership School of Indigenous Women is a process that we have been building over several years. It was strengthened in 2013 with the implementation of the International Program on Human Rights and Advocacy Strategies. Over 140 indigenous women activists and leaders from Africa, Asia, the Arctic, the Americas and the Pacific have participated in the program. The first stage is theoretical and includes online learning as well as in-person seminars at Columbia University and the United Nations. The second stage is based on participation, with women leaders actively participating in the sessions of the UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues. Through the Global School, the participants strengthen their knowledge of international human rights instruments and their articulation through the development and implementation of advocacy strategies. The participants are selected by an Advisory Council made up of women with extensive experience in training and/or advocacy processes in the global arena. The "Indigenous Women Leaders at Columbia" is also an integral component of the annual Global Leadership School of Indigenous Women program. The seminar is hosted by the Institute for the Study of Human Rights (ISHR)/Indigenous Peoples' Rights Program, aims to provide a complementary human rights curriculum to the planned FIMI program, so as to give the participating Indigenous women leaders an opportunity to explore a broader context of human rights topics and advocacy.

James M. Grijalva, Director – Tribal Environmental Law Project

The School of Law, in consultation with area tribes and Indian leaders, has established the Northern Plains Indian Law Center. The Center's purposes are to assist tribal governments in addressing legal issues affecting tribal lands and members, and to promote diversity within the legal profession by increasing recruitment and retention of American Indian law students. The Center is a clearinghouse for American Indian legal materials and provides a forum for discussing and resolving legal issues confronting Indian tribes, the states, and the federal government. It will also support tribal advocacy training programs. Programs: Northern Plains Tribal Judicial Training Institute, Native American Law Project, Tribal Environmental Law Project, Institute for the Study of Tribal Gaming Law and Policy. Project Components of the Center: Tribal Judicial Institute and Tribal Environmental Law Project. This project provides legal and policy assistance to tribal governments developing environmental programs intended to protect the health and welfare of tribal citizens, tribal natural resources, and the quality of reservations and ceded lands. The project also researches legal issues of general relevance to the authority of tribal governments to implement and administer civil regulatory programs.

Dr. Steven Andrew Light, Co-Director

Kathryn Rand (Law) & Steven Light (Political Science) founded the Institute for the Study of Tribal Gaming Law and Policy at the University of North Dakota in 2002 as the first university-affiliated institute in the U.S. dedicated to the study of Indian gaming. Rand & Light are internationally recognized experts on Indian gaming, having published over 30 journal articles, book chapters, essays, and three books: Indian Gaming Law: Cases and Materials (Carolina Academic Press, 2008), Indian Gaming Law and Policy (Carolina Academic Press, 2006), and Indian Gaming and Tribal Sovereignty: The Casino Compromise (University Press of Kansas, 2005). They have twice testified on Indian gaming regulation before the U.S. Senate Committee on Indian Affairs in Washington, D.C., and were featured on C-SPAN's Book TV. They frequently present their research and perspectives on Indian gaming before diverse audiences, including professional and trade groups, tribal and non-tribal civic associations, academic conferences, and university endowed lectures. Both are members of the International Masters of Gaming Law, and Rand is on the Editorial Board of the Gaming Law Review. Rand and Light write a column, "Indian Gaming Today," that appears regularly in Casino Lawyer magazine; have written for Casino Enterprise Management and Indian Gaming magazines. They blog on Indian gaming and the legal, political, and public policy issues raised by the tribal gaming industry at their website, Indian Gaming Today, at indiangamingnow.com. Activities: The Institute provides legal and policy assistance and analysis to all interested individuals, governments, and organizations, and conducting scholarly and practical research in the area of tribal gaming. The Institute adopts a unique "team-based" interdisciplinary approach to legal and policy analysis of the complicated and highly technical issues related to Indian gaming, including regulation and agency authority, policy and socioeconomic impact analysis, tribal-state compacting, Class II vs. Class III gaming, tribal law and sovereignty, federal Indian law, labor relations, state referenda and voter initiatives, the federal acknowledgment process, land-into-trust applications, and "off-reservation" gaming. The Institute provides legal and policy assistance related to tribal gaming enterprises to all interested governments and organizations, assists tribes with gaming enterprises in pursuing reservation economic development and building strong tribal governments, and contributes to the scholarly and practical research and literature in the area of tribal gaming. The Institute's primary focus is on the particular issues faced by tribes in the Great Plains, including North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Wyoming, and Montana. The institute offers an interdisciplinary perspective on tribal gaming, incorporating law, political science, and public administration. The Native American Law Project - This project, offered some semesters, provides legal assistance to the Spirit Lake Nation of the Fort Totten Indian Reservation. Second and third year law students provide legal services under the supervision of a practicing attorney. The project has also served as the Tribe's Prosecutor for criminal matters.

Willow (Environment, Anthropology, Marion Campus); Amy Zaharlick (Emerita Anthropology)
Description: A critical strength of AIS is our collaborative engagement with the Newark Earthworks Center in Newark. The center contains the largest contiguous earthworks of the ancient Ohioans, the Hopewell peoples. It's a gigantic and amazing site that looks to be on track for UNESCO World Heritage status in the next couple of years. Its presence here enables the American Indian Studies faculty, staff and students to take part in colloquium and visits by Native American lecturers and artists to the earthworks. American Indian Studies is an interdisciplinary field of study that focuses on the histories, experiences, languages, arts, and cultures of peoples indigenous to the lands that now comprise the United States of America. It seeks to broaden students' understandings of the diversity and complexity of American Indian identities, communities, and nations; to make connections between Native peoples and cultures in the U.S. and Indigenous peoples and cultures across the Americas and around the globe; to provide comparative and intersectional approaches to issues of race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, class, and citizenship; and to encourage linking educational and research initiatives to community and political concerns. Central Ohio is a traditional homeland of the Shawnee Nation; Delaware, Wyandot, and other Indigenous nations also have strong ties to these lands. One hundred years ago, in October 1911, the Society of American Indians (SAI), the first American Indian activist association organized and run by Native people themselves held its first meetings on the campus of The Ohio State University. Degree: Interdisciplinary Undergraduate Minor in American Indian Studies. Resources: The Multicultural Center; (AIS) has strong connections to the Newark Earthworks Center (NEC) on the Ohio State-Newark campus and to the student organizations the American Indian Council (AIC) and the American Indian Students in Engineering and Sciences (AISES), with whom we collaborate on various projects and programming; Office of Diversity and Inclusion; Multicultural Center.

Program: BA and Minor in Native American Studies. Faculty & Instructors: Michelle Cooke (Adjunct); Joe Coon (Instructor); Joan Ellis (Instructor); Brandon White Eagle (Instructor); Scott Barton (Professor of History); Christopher Bean (Dept. Chair and Professor of History); Bradley Clampitt (History); Laura Clark (Adjunct); Tom Cowger (Chickasaw Nation Endowed Chair) (History); Greg Sutton (History). Description: The center is named in honor of Amos H. Hayes and Daniel Hayes. Amos Hayes was a prosperous local businessman, Chickasaw Lighthorseman, tribal county judge, Chickasaw legislator and ethnographic informant to the Smithsonian Institution. His nephew, Daniel Hayes, donated the land on which ECU is located. NAS major and minor internships have allowed ECU students to receive firsthand training in various departments at the Chickasaw Nation and other local tribes. Some of the program's recent graduates now work at major metropolitan newspapers and some are enrolled in graduate school or law programs. ECU students and Chickasaw Nation citizens also have the opportunity to participate in the Chickasaw Clemente courses held in the Hayes Center. The courses are named after baseball Hall of Famer and model humanitarian Roberto Clemente. Resources: Native American Student Services; Native American Student Association; Linscheid Library.

UNIVERSITY OF SCIENCE & ARTS OF OKLAHOMA AMERICAN INDIAN STUDIES PROGRAM

Division of Social Sciences & Business
1727 W. Alabama, Rm. 229 Davis Hall • CHICKASHA, OK 73018
(405) 574-1289 Fax 521-1220
Thurman Lee Hester, Jr. (Choctaw), Program Director & Professor of American Indian Studies; E-mail: fchesterl@usao.edu

Program: Major and minor in American Indian Studies. The American Indian studies program provides knowledge of the traditions and history of the first Americans and an understanding of the unique relationship of the United States government to the tribes and individual American Indians. Its curriculum has shifted to accommodate changing contemporary requirements of students. Greater emphasis has been placed on acquiring quantitative skills and on study in financial management and intergovernmental relations. The goal of the American Indian studies program is to develop a diverse student body to include American Indians from the many tribes in Oklahoma and the nation. In addition to traditional on-campus offerings, the program also offers extension in-service and mid-career training. As an academic program, American Indian Studies is designed to advance USAO's interdisciplinary, liberal arts mission and further enrich the IDS experience. Students are advised to select a second major that is especially suited for acquiring marketable skills that complement an American Indian studies degree for entry into a chosen career upon graduation. American Indian tribes collectively make up one of the largest employers in Oklahoma and holding a degree or a minor in American Indian studies can improve employability in related fields. Faculty: Jay Goombi (Kiowa-Apache); Thurman Lee Hester, Jr. (Choctaw) (Director). Resources: Meredith Indigenous Humanities Center; Nash Library. Special programs: Internships with regional tribes and organizations. Financial aid available.

creates opportunities for students, faculty, staff to utilize knowledge and resources to serve the needs of Indian Country. Clinic: The Jodi G. Marquette American Indian Wills Clinic at Oklahoma City University School of Law is accepting clients for estate planning services. Through this clinic, law students working under the supervision of a licensed attorney provide wills drafting services to American Indians who own an interest in Indian land in Oklahoma.
These services will be provided free of charge, thanks to a generous anonymous donation of $250,000 to further the work of Wills Services Project, which received its initial funding from the Oklahoma Bar Foundation. The clinic first began in January 2009 as part of the NALRC's Native American Externship Program – with $20,000 in seed funds provided by the Oklahoma Bar Foundation. The program offers practical experience for students who provide needed legal services while receiving instruction and training in client relations, as well as the complex area of American Indian estate planning. For more information on the clinic, or to apply for the services, contact the American Indian Law and Sovereignty Center at Oklahoma City University School of Law at 405.208.5017. For information on Indian land in Oklahoma, contact the Office of Special Trustee for American Indians Beneficiary Call Center at 888.678.6836. Chickasaw Nation Law Library.

CAIHR is a multidisciplinary research organization and conducts health-related studies with American Indian groups. The focus of the research at CAIHR is to improve the health status of the American Indian population. CAIHR conducts epidemiological and clinical studies of health problems among these populations, with emphasis on diabetes and its many complications including heart disease, retinopathy, renal disease, leg vessel disease, and cerebral vascular disease. CAIHR also conducts studies focusing on health promotion and disease prevention. CAIHR has developed a productive relationship with American Indian tribes in Oklahoma including the Apache, Caddo, Comanche, Delaware, Fort Sill Apache, Kiowa, the Wichita & Affiliated tribes located in southwestern Oklahoma, the Cherokee Nation in northeastern Oklahoma, and other tribes across the nation. AIDPC has several research, education, and tribal outreach projects designed to reduce the unjust health disparity of diabetes and its multiple co-morbidities in American Indian Nations. Experts from the Colleges of Public Health, Nursing, and Medicine are brought together in an interdisciplinary intellectual, research, and practice environment to reach the goal of a diabetes-free native world. Many key leadership positions are held by American Indian researchers including the Principal Investigator who is Oklahoma Choctaw. The AIDPC reaches all Oklahoma Indian Nations via their partnership with the Oklahoma Area Inter-tribal Health Board as well intensive collaborations with the Chickasaw Nation and the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma. Program: Headlands Indian Health Careers. Financial aid: Grants to Native American students who are interested in preparing for careers as health professionals.

A federally-funded collaborative program whose ultimate goal is to increase the number of Native American physicians practicing medicine in the U.S. Jointly sponsored by the Center for Tribal Studies, Northeastern State University (Tahlequah, OK) and University of Oklahoma College of Medicine. Established in 1993 at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center in the Colleges of Dentistry and Medicine, the Native American Center of Excellence Consortium has been made possible with funds provided by the U.S. Public Health Service. Designated as the only Native American Center among the 54 dental schools in the United States and only one of four located in a College of Medicine, the activities of this center are directed toward accomplishing the following goals: Increasing interest in dental and medical careers among Native American high school and college students. Better preparing Native American students pursuing careers in dentistry and medicine, enrolling and graduating more Native American students at the OUHSC Colleges of Dentistry and Medicine. Increasing awareness among all OU dental and medical graduates and other practitioners in Oklahoma of the health needs of Native Americans. Encouraging Native Americans to pursue careers in higher education, resulting in increased appointments to faculty and administrative positions. Fostering research related to the health of Native Americans. Established 1993.

Leadership & ongoing commitment from Provost Gary Sandefur and Vice Provost Sheryl Tucker underpin center strategy and are relied upon by center director, Elizabeth Mee Payne and by the center team including coordinators, Sky Rogers and Courtney Arnall, administrative specialists; Jennifer Craig and leader, James Jump. The center's collaborative model was made possible through the joint investment of OSU and the Chickasaw Nation, with the ongoing invitation to other tribal nations to join as financial partners. In August 2016, the Choctaw Nation partnered. A three-fold mission guides the center. Sovereignty: Promote understanding, respect and exercise of tribal sovereignty. Students: Promote American Indian student success and graduation. Partnerships: Increase the number and quality of partnerships between OSU and the 39 federally recognized tribal nations in Oklahoma. Publication: Sovereign Stance: Elevating Culture. The Center for Tribal Studies offers a variety of services to enhance the academic experience of students in a supportive environment that values the traditions of American Indian cultural heritage. The Center facilitates program development, cultural enrichment, student support, and professional development opportunities for the University community. The Center serves all students, but administers many programs that are specifically designed to increase the educational attainment of American Indian populations. By nurturing educational leadership, cultural enrichment, and professional development among students, leaders and scholars emerge, many of whom will serve in professions benefiting tribal governments and communities. Activities: Annual NSU Symposium and Powwow in April. Established 1990.

Purpose: AIMS endeavors to motivate American Indian and Alaska Native students to remain in the academic pipeline and to pursue a career in the health professions and/or biomedical research. Thereby increasing the number of American Indian and Alaska Native medical professionals in the workforce. American Indian and Alaska Native people have an appreciation for mind, body, and spirit as inseparable bodies when it comes to wellness. Improving the overall health of American Indian and Alaska Native communities requires the commitment of many individuals, including the next generation of Native clinicians and researchers. AIMS works with tribes in an effort to include culture and tradition into all training programs aimed at helping to meet the health and wellness needs and education of Oklahoma's tribal and rural communities. Through recruitment and training of rural physicians, AIMS works to help meet the health care needs of the Native American population.

Native American Studies Minor. Description: An interdisciplinary field that uses multiple approaches from history, anthropology, law, literature, ethnic studies, and other disciplines to understand contemporary Native American lives. Examines Native American identities, practices, histories, cultures, and political statuses in context from the earliest times until the present. Highlights the unique place of tribes in state-tribal-federal intergovernmental matrix and the myriad distinct issues Native peoples of the United States face, from language and cultural protection to environmental issues to economic development and beyond. Program: Native American and Indigenous Studies Academic Residential Community (NAIS-ARC) The ARC was developed by Native faculty and staff to create an academic, residential, and student support services community dedicated to indigenous intellectual, social, and cultural life, designed to introduce students to the field of Native Studies and provide a strong cohort for student success. Resources: Many Nations Longhouse; Northwest Indian Language Institute; The Pacific Northwest Tribal Climate Change Project.

Description: An interdisciplinary program focusing on the comparative cultural heritage and experiences of various marginalized groups within the U.S. including American Indians and Alaska Natives. The program fosters critical perspective that seeks, as its purpose of inquiry, to explore how social structures and ideological discourses shape, influence, and constrain human activity. In particular, members of our program are committed to the discovery and exploration of how complex social relations of race, ethnicity, culture, and indigeneity, in conjunction with other social systems and structures, can give rise to unjust social relations, limit human endeavor, and normalize privilege & oppression. The primary focus of our program is on traditionally under-represented communities in the social imaginary of the United States. Project: The Art of Ceremony: Regalia of Native Oregon. Special Resources & Facilities: Byrd & Polleski Collection of Native North American ethnographic and archaeological materials; Native American Gallery of Ford Museum of Art.

Degree: Major & Minor in American Indian Studies. Since its founding in 2010, the American Indian Education and Cultural Center (AIECC) at South Dakota State University (SDSU) houses the American Indian Student Services (AISS) and American Indian Studies (AIS) programs, and remains as the nexus of cultural programming, services and advocacy that supports the recruitment, transition, retention, persistence and graduation of American Indian students. Together, AISS and AIS actively promotes access to higher education and community resources, seeks to increase cross-cultural engagement, encourages the appreciation of cultural and human differences, and advocates for the respectful inclusion of Indigenous knowledge. AIS will include the interdisciplinary, comparative, and ultimately transformative approach to the study of the historical, political, social, and on-going experiences of American Indians, Alaska Natives and Indigenous people within the United States and the global community. Students will gain an awareness of indigenous outlooks that ground the national and international field of AIS, knowledge of the foundations of Federal Indian policy, sovereignty, cultural revitalization and continuance, economic development, the arts; and, in the deployment of appropriate and relevant research with Native and Indigenous communities. Additionally, AIS will explore the historic and contemporary experiences of Indigenous peoples both within & beyond the United States through a critical examination of colonialism and the manner in which Indigenous people throughout the world have countered, resisted, and continue to struggle for justice. Scholarships available.

The NAIS fosters and supports teaching and intellectual engagements around the languages, cultures, knowledge, histories, and current political struggles of indigenous peoples. We are particularly concerned with scholarship and intellectual exchange that contributes to the economic, social, and political advancement of indigenous peoples. The NAIS contributes to efforts to build a diverse campus by actively working on recruitment of indigenous students and faculty. While NAIS is housed in the College of Liberal Arts, our faculty and course offerings span schools and colleges through the university, including Education, Law, Music, and Information Sciences. The programs offer courses that allow our students to develop a broad and in-depth understanding of indigenous thought and indigenous issues. They also provide a community for NAIS students through social events, a brown bag series in which students present their work, and strong ties to student organizations. They run a speakers series that provides students, faculty and community members the opportunity to learn from and connect with indigenous intellectuals from around the world. They also provide summer research fellowships for undergraduate and graduate students. Established 2006.

Description: Research unit of the University of Utah, affiliated with the College of Social & Behavioral Sciences. The center consults, researches, publishes, provides educational and curricular support to Indian tribes, school districts, other organizations, and the general public. Faculty: Gregory E. Smoak, Co-principal Investigators, Shoshone-Bannock Project; Activities: Works with tribes to develop historical & ethnographical documentation to support legal claims. It has assisted 15 tribes to develop tribal archives relevant to their land, water, and culture. e.g. Ute Mountain Ute Tribal Archive; The Rivers & Fisheries of the Shoshone-Bannock Peoples; The Tohono O'odham Tribal Archive. It provided 1,500 interviews of Native Americans to the Doris Duke Indian Oral History Project. The Utah American Indian Digital Archive is a joint venture between the American West Center and the Marriott Library with generous support and guidance from the Division of Indian Affairs of the State of Utah. The project compiles essential Utah tribal primary source documents digitized for an online, key-word searchable archive. In undertaking this state-of-the-art venture, Center staff has built on the extensive research done across the country by Floyd O'Neil & Greg Thompson in their combined years of service at the American West Center. The goal is to create an archive that will serve more than just researchers, offering the tribes themselves unprecedented ease of access to information about their past. Now Available! Utah American Indian Digital Archive and The Utah Indian Curriculum Project. New Project: The historical register nomination for the Stewart Indian School located just south of Carson City, Nevada. The boarding school opened in 1880 in an attempt to Americanize Native youth through education. For nearly a century, the Stewart Indian School followed national models for the forced assimilation of Native American children. Established 1964.

American Indian Studies is one of the minors offered by the Ethnic Studies Program of the School for Cultural and Social Transformation. This minor allows for a more concentrated focus on a specific racialized population in the United States—in this case, peoples with heritage from the indigenous communities of the U.S., including Alaska and Hawaii. Students pursuing a minor in American Indian Studies can choose classes from four content areas: History and Politics, Contemporary Issues, Literature and Language, and Gender and Ethnicity. Through your coursework, you will gain a broad view of the point where race & gender and contemporary issues intersect.

Washington State University is currently recruiting Native Americans to train as speech-language pathologists. There's need for speech-language pathologists to serve Native American communities. In response to this need the Department of Speech and Hearing Sciences at Washington State University offers a special training program. Program assists Native students in obtaining financial aid and provides educational support for Native students as they pursue training in the field of speech-language pathology. Graduates are prepared to work in educational or medical settings with individuals who have difficulty with their speech, language, or hearing. They value the contribution that Native American students can make to the field of speech-language pathology. Therefore, we provide students with opportunities to explore this profession as it relates to Native culture through course work, observations, clinical experience, & research in Native communities. In addition, we provide professional mentorship. Some scholarships are available for tribally-enrolled, Native American students.

Program: Native American Studies. Degrees: BA Major and Minor in Native American Studies. Northland was founded with a unique ideal to fulfill the educational aspirations of both local immigrants and Native Americans—particularly the Ojibwe bands in the Lake Superior region. With Bad River, Red Cliff, and Lac Courte Oreilles tribes located within fifty miles of the campus, the College's relationship and commitment has only deepened through our long history. In 1927, the Bad River community entrusted the College with a sacred Spirit Stone, used both in rites of passage and in traditional religious ceremonies. The Stone was given to the College for safekeeping and prominently displayed on campus for many years. In 1932, the Bad River Band adopted the College's second president, Dr. J.D. Brownell, as a full member. Northland initiated and implemented a Native American studies program in the 1970s at a time when there were few programs. We've since created a Native American Museum on campus. We also support an active Native American Student Association and support and help coordinate year-round events including a Spring Powwow. In 2011, we created the Indigenous Cultures Center to support and focus these activities under one umbrella as a way to continue to honor the commitment we made at our founding and to support the interests of our students. Courses: Ojibwe Language; Native American History; Tribal Legal Studies; Native American Woodland Skills; Native American Arts and Culture; Native American Philosophy, Beliefs, and Values; Northern Plains Cultures. Resources: Spring powwow; scholarships available. Wind River Tribal College (WRTC), located in Fort Washakie, Wyoming on the Wind River Indian Reservation, offers associate degree programs and coordinates with the Sky People Higher Education Program and the University of Wyoming Trio Programs to serve students and individuals who want to further their skills and education. The College generally serves geographically isolated populations that have no other means accessing education beyond the high school level. Wind River Tribal College's enrollment consists of mostly Northern Arapaho and Pima students. WRTC provides an opportunity for people to become productive members within families, communities and tribes through economic development and through educational, vocational, cultural and technical programs. The College has articulation agreements with the University of Wyoming and the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh. WRTC was chartered by the Northern Arapaho Business Council in September 1997.

Description: Undergraduate major and minor; MA and PhD minor. Examines Native North American culture and social life from both historical and contemporary perspectives. Resources: High Plains American Indian Research Institute; Provides support services to Native students. Outreach efforts; American Indian Alumni Association; Honoring of American Indian Graduates. Events: Fall Forum each November brings renowned American Indian scholars, writers, and artists to the campus; and American Indian Week in March. The High Plains American Indian Research Institute (HPAIRI) aims to promote positive and productive relationships between the University of Wyoming and regional American Indian communities. Assisting with research, education, and service, the HPAIRI intends to facilitate tribal access to University resources and, at the same time, to help UW researchers connect with tribal communities in a coordinated fashion. The HPAIRI will facilitate collaborative research among tribal communities, UW and visiting faculty, and UW undergraduate and graduate students. Its research agenda will be based on the needs and interests of Native communities in the region and those communities will be full partners in research endeavors. Additionally, the HPAIRI is working toward establishing a collection of informational materials that may assist both tribal and UW researchers with their projects. In 2011, a survey was submitted to University of Wyoming faculty and staff to learn about research and educational activities between UW participants and tribal partners. The results indicate that a variety of UW units do have relationships with tribal communities in the region and a significant number of those relationships involve science, technology, engineering, and/or math (STEM) activities. The survey results will assist with the continued development of the HPAIRI & with the implementation of its activities. Publication: The Ledger

Since 1955, the U.S. Public Health Service (PHS), through its Indian Health Service (IHS), an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services, is responsible for providing federal health services to American Indians and Alaska Natives. The provision of health services to federally recognized Indians grew out of a special relationship between the federal government and Indian tribes. This government-to-government relationship has been given form and substance by numerous treaties, laws, Supreme Court decisions, and Executive Orders. The IHS is the principal federal health care provider and health advocate for Indian people. The IHS provides health services to approximately two million American Indians and Alaska Natives who belong to 566 federally recognized tribes in 35 states. The goal is to raise their health status to the highest possible level; to ensure the equity, availability and accessibility of a comprehensive high quality health care delivery system providing maximum involvement of American Indians and Alaska Natives in defining their health needs, setting priorities for their local areas, and managing and controlling their health program. The IHS budget for fiscal year 2013 was $4.4 billion. This section lists hospitals, medical and health centers under the jurisdiction of the IHS. Arranged alpha-geographically.

States served: Works in conjunction with its 19 Service Units to provide health care to approximately 122,000 Indians on reservations located in North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, & Iowa. Service units include nine hospitals, eight health centers, two school health stations, and several smaller health stations & satellite clinics. Also operates an active research effort through its Area Epidemiology Program. The Great Plains Area IHS also provides health services to approximately 6,000 Native Americans who are not counted in the user population of the Area. This population does not reside within any service unit; however, they meet the IHS eligibility criteria for health services provided at IHS or Tribally operated direct care facilities. The largest concentrations of the non-service unit eligible are found in Aberdeen and Sioux Falls, South Dakota and Bismarck and Grand Forks, North Dakota. Tribal involvement is a major objective of the program, and several tribes have assumed management for their own health care programs through contractual arrangements with IHS. Tribal Projects Specialists: Dennis Renvilles (Bismarck) (701) 222-3540; Priscilla Lee (Pierre) (605) 224-8544 Roger Condon (Aberdeen) (605) 226-7584; and Pat Giroux Rapid City) (605) 348-1900. States served: North & South Dakota & Iowa. States served: Northeast Arizona, Northwest New Mexico, Southern Utah. Has jurisdiction over the following Indian hospitals: Chinle; Fort Defiance (AZ); Tuba City (AZ); Crownpoint (NM); Gallup (NM); Shiprock (NM); and the following Indian health centers: Chinle (AZ), Tsalle (AZ), Tohatchi (NM); Kayenta (AZ); Inscription House (Tonalea, AZ); Pinon Health Center (Pinon, AZ); Winslow; and Dzilth-Na-O-Dith-Hle (Bloomfield, NM).

The NAIHS delivers health services to a user population of over 244,000 American Indians in five Federal service units on and near the Navajo Nation. The Navajo Nation is one of the largest Indian reservations in the United States. The Navajo Nation consists of more than 25,000 contiguous square miles and three satellite communities, and extends into portions of the states of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah. NAIHS primarily delivers health services to members of the Navajo Nation and the San Juan Southern Paiute Tribe, and also provides services to other Native Americans, including Zunis, Hopis, and other American Indian beneficiaries. The five (5) Federal Service Units (SUs) include Chinle, Crownpoint, Gallup, Kayenta, and Shiprock. NAIHS provides inpatient, emergency, outpatient, public health, and other services at four hospitals: Chinle Comprehensive Health Care Facility, Crownpoint Health Care Facility, Gallup Indian Medical Center, and Northern Navajo Medical Center (Shiprock, NM). These inpatient facilities comprise a total of 222 hospital beds. The Kayenta Health Center in Kayenta, AZ will transition to begin operating as an Alternative Rural Hospital in late 2017 by offering ten short stay nursing beds and ambulatory surgery. Navajo Area also has seven full-time health centers providing outpatient, community health, preventive health, and other services. There are also five part-time health stations. In addition to the NAIHS, the Navajo health care system includes an urban health program in Flagstaff, Arizona, the Navajo Department of Health (NDOH), and five Tribal health care corporations. Native Americans for Community Action, Inc. (NACA), founded in 1971, is one of 34 Urban Indian health programs in the United States. NACA provides outpatient, behavioral health, health promotion, and other services to the population in and around Flagstaff, Arizona. The NDOH, created in 1977, ensures access to quality and culturally acceptable health care. The NDOH offers nutrition, aging, substance abuse, education, community health outreach, and other services to the Navajo population through regulation, direct service delivery, and coordination with federal, state, and local partners. NDOH has a master contract with NAIHS under the auspices of Public Law 93-638, the Indian Self Determination and Education Assistance Act.

The Winslow Indian Health Care Center Inc., approved a rendering of the new Dilkon Health Center, marking the next major development of the facility that is expected to break ground 2019 with an anticipated opening in 2023. The rendering, may undergo some minor changes before the final design is complete, the rendering depicts a view that looks onto the main entrance and the Wellness and Dental Care wing. "With every major development, our new facility will quickly become a reality. Seeing what it will look like from the exterior is exciting, and reminds us that even with all the work ahead, we are building something incredible for the Dilkon community. I'm very pleased, and look forward to the work ahead," said Sally Pete, CEO of WIHCC. The design team now turns its attention to department layout, equipment and furniture placement and utility locations. The new Dilkon Health Center will host a broad range of ambulatory care and inpatient medical services, including but not limited to: 12-bed inpatient care, level III emergency/trauma center, primary care, eye care, dental, diagnostic imaging, laboratory, pharmacy, physical therapy, behavioral health and other, in addition to all ancillary support services. Architectural features of the new hospital include a mix of CMU, stone, rammed earth, and enormous windows on both floors-reflecting both the human scale, and the natural features of the surrounding Dilkon community.

Staffed by two physicians, two physician assistants, one dentist, & one psychologist, this AAAHC accredited family practice clinic offers direct medical, dental, mental health and substance abuse services. The total number of staff consists of 39 employees. Visiting specialties include audiology, cardiology, hematology, psychiatry & rheumatology. We also offer tele-health services including dietary, cardiology, diabetic retinopathy screening, pain management, psychiatry & rheumatology. Contract health care services are also coordinated by referring to hospitals and clinics both locally & in nearby cities. On-site pharmacy services are available including an automated refill line. A 24/7 Nurse Advice Hotline is another resource available to our community. Tele-education opportunities are available for all staff members. Southern Bands Health Center has successfully incorporated the use of Electronic Health Records into our practice. We also provide services through our Battle Mountain Field Clinic twice monthly. In isolated communities, transportation and employment are often scarce. We must reach all the people to promote awareness of our programs. Our community health outreach services include public health nursing, mental health, and environmental health programs. Tribal Health Facilities: Duckwater, Ely and Goshute reservations also offer direct and contract health care services to their communities. Clinic days/hours and services vary by facility. Affiliated with Phoenix Area Indian Health Service. Tribally operated.

Anadarko is a community of approximately 6,560, located fifty miles from Oklahoma City, Oklahoma and forty miles from Lawton, Oklahoma. Anadarko boasts many restaurants, grocery stores, clothing stores, gasoline stations, florists, a movie theatre, a public library, numerous different faith churches, and excellent educational facilities for children. Anadarko has less congestion than an urban setting and is near recreational sites and a major airport located in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. The climate is generally mild. The Center has a multidisciplinary outpatient department that provides a wide range of services including primary care, acute care, & management of chronic health conditions for our community, providing approximately 50 to 80 visits a day. In addition, we provide a weekly diabetes clinic that is supported by several ancillary departments, enabling a broad range of care to our diabetic population. There are several specialty clinics provided on a monthly basis including Rheumatology, Endocrinology, Mammography, Nursing, Podiatry, Wound Care, & Women's Health. We partner with our tribal Community Health Representatives and the Public Health Department to provide preventative services in our community and to the students at the Riverside Indian School. The Anadarko Indian Health Center opened in its current location in 1984. The Health Center is situated in a newly renovated 20,000 sq. ft. building. We utilize evolving concepts such as the Electronic Health Record. The Health Center offers in-house specialty clinics, as well as a referral system to specialists. The Center relocated from the Kiowa Tribal Complex to this newly constructed facility in 2011. The clinic provides outpatient medical care to patients of all ages with one full time family medicine provider. Pediatrics, Podiatry, Nursing, and Optometry specialty clinics are offered weekly. The Town of Carnegie is a vibrant community of 1,723 people located on the western edge of Caddo County, Oklahoma. Early settlement in the area straddled both sides of the Washita River with the early community being called Latham. As there was already a town by that name in the territory, the settlement changed its name to Carnegie, in honor of steel magnate and philanthropist Andrew Carnegie. #### WILL ROGERS HEALTH CENTER

1020 Lenape Drive • NOWATA, OK 74048
(918) 273-7500; Administrator: Cindy L. Collins

Originally named the Nowata Primary Health Care Clinic, that facility was housed in a very small building. It was relocated in 1997 to a location within the community's industrial park. While this facility offered more space, community demands quickly outgrew the new location. As a result, the tribe undertook the construction of a brand new state-of-the-art facility to meet growing demands and better serve its citizens. The new 25,500 square foot facility opened its doors in December 2007 as the Will Rogers Health Center.

The museum is located on The National Mall in Washington, DC. It's a living memorial dedicated to the collection, preservation, study and exhibition of American Indian languages, literature, history, art and culture. The centerpiece of the new museum is the priceless collection of almost One million objects, once stored in the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation in New York City, representing 10,000 years of history from more than 1,000 indigenous cultures. This collection, that includes a library, photo archives and other resource materials, has been transferred to this new National Museum in Washington, DC. Also, a Resource Center. All three resource centers will be digitally connected, and information will flow between all facilities. Visitors to NMAI on The National Mall will be able to access information and materials from either of the other NMAI Resource Center locations, and vice versa. The Mall Resource Center will contain 18 public access computers in the Interactive Learning Center, a work-study area, book stacks, workrooms and a classroom. Opened September 21, 2004.

THE NATIONAL NATIVE AMERICAN VETERANS MEMORIAL

The Memorial will serve as a reminder to the nation and the world of the service and sacrifice of Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian veterans," said Kevin Gover, director of the museum, in a press release. "Native Americans have always answered the call to serve, and this memorial is a fitting tribute to their patriotism and deep commitment to this country." The memorial on the grounds of the museum was commissioned by Congress to give "all Americans the opportunity to learn of the proud and courageous tradition of service of Native Americans in the Armed Forces of the United States." Native Americans have served in every major military conflict in the U.S. since the Revolutionary War. This will be the first national landmark in Washington, D.C., to focus on the contributions of American Indians, Alaska Natives and Native Hawaiians who have served in the military. The memorial design is by Harvey Pratt (Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma), a multimedia artist, retired forensic artist and Marine Corps Vietnam veteran. The design, called "Warriors' Circle of Honor," features an elevated stainless-steel circle resting on a carved stone drum. It also incorporates water for sacred ceremonies, benches for gatherings and four lances where veterans, family members, tribal leaders and others can tie cloths for prayers and healing. The outside memorial can be visited for free at any time, unless safety considerations require it to be closed. The National Museum of the American Indian is currently closed to visitors. Opened November 11, 2020.

Description: The pre-Columbian Indian mound is one of the largest domiciliary Indian mounds in the Tennessee Valley. The museum contains Indian artifacts. Located in the southeastern portion of Lawrence County, Oakville Indian Mounds Park and Museum is shaded by the 180,000 acre William B. Bankhead National Forest and shares the treasures and remaining vestiges of the great Indian hunting grounds. The Bankhead is encompassed by part of the Warrior Mountains, the western terminus of the Appalachian Mountains. With its prolific wildlife, waterfalls, caves, and deep gorges, Bankhead is one of the southeast's premier sites for petroglyphs, prehistoric drawings, and rock carvings. Indians hunted in this area for some 12,000 years before the Europeans arrived. Oakville Indian Mounds Park (hereinafter referred to as the Park) is an educational, archeological, genealogical, and sociological legacy to Lawrence County and North Alabama. Spanning a timeline of human occupation of over 14,000 years and a diversity of races and cultures, the Park preserves, protects, and presents artifacts dating as far back as 10,000 B.C. and ancient geological evidence of the settlement and evolution of the people of this region of Alabama. Creek (Muskogee), Yuchi (Uchean), Shawnee (Algonquin), Chickasaw (Muskogee), and Cherokee (Iroquoian) Indians were the five historic tribes to live in the Oakville area. The Indian Education Program began in Lawrence County in 1986 with the primary purpose being to teach the local Indian history and culture to Indian students attending the Lawrence County Schools and to make students aware of their tribal roots. The program serves 1700 students with eligibility based on tribal enrollment of their grandparents, parents, or the students themselves. Most of the students are members of the Echota Cherokee Tribe of Alabama and are of Cherokee, Chickasaw, or Creek Indian mixed-blood heritage.

FLORENCE INDIAN MOUND MUSEUM

1028 S. Court St. • FLORENCE, AL 35630

(256) 760-6427

Yuchi's nearby Singing River, the Tennessee River. Maintains a collection of rare and sought-after Clovis and Cumberland points 500 generations old, animal effigy pipes, woven textiles, soap stone carvings-all in chronological order, from Paleo, Transitional, Archaic, Woodland, Mississippian and Historic Native American ages. The large earthen mound known as the Florence Indian Mound was the heart of a large prehistoric cultural center that dominated this section of the Tennessee River Valley thousands of years ago. An early 1800s map showed the mound as quadrilateral in shape with its four corners corresponding to the four cardinal directions. It featured an eight to ten foot high earthen embankment that partially encircled it from river bank to river bank. The University of Alabama conducted excavations of the mound and determined that it was originally built between AD 100 and 500, during the Woodland Stage. These investigations also found that 1,000 years later, people associated with the Mississippian Stage added more earth to the summit and continued to use the mound as a cultural center.

Klukwan is a very traditional southeast Alaskan native village that has a rich cultural history and still maintains a subsistence way of life. In the old days the community members used to live in communal clan houses but were convinced by health officials during the great epidemics that swept through the village in early contact days that it would be better to live in single family dwellings.

Tribal communities across the Colorado Plateau face daunting problems: loss of language and culture, 50 percent unemployment rates, lasting and damaging impacts of past uranium mining, dependence on revenues from endangered power plants and coal mines, and ever-increasing impacts of global warming. To ensure that the plateau's bio-cultural diversity survives and thrives despite these difficult changes, tribal members, communities, and governments are being challenged to simultaneously balance cultural preservation, sustainable economic development, and environmental protection. Their success in doing so will determine the vitality of the plateau over the coming decades.

The Hatathali Museum is located in Chinle, Arizona, on the Navajo Community College grounds. The museum is home to a permanent collection of an estimated three thousand artifacts from Native Americans. The collection includes documents, textiles, pottery, photographs and native paintings. The Museum facility holds an estimated forty percent of the exhibit while another forty percent can be found displayed in various portions of the college. There is also a loan system of the collection for students and personnel of the college. There are also classes held all year long in the traditional Navajo arts. The Museum also hosts a number of other functions including seasonal workshops. The workshops include a Christmas Bazaar, Art Shows, the Native American Music Festival Art Market and Dine Culture for patrons of the museum. The Museum also includes the opportunity for self guided tours. The Culture Center is included in plans to expand the Hatathali Museum in the future. The Museum is dedicated to preserving the history and culture of the Native American culture. The exhibits take visitors back in time and provide an amazing learning opportunity. Additional information about tours, the lending of artifacts and opportunities offered can be obtained by contacting the facility directly.

Anna Dandy, Director
In 1966, a group of dedicated visionaries of the Mono Indians of North Fork drew up plans to create the first museum solely owned and operated by the Mono people. The purpose was to preserve and protect their artifacts and make sure their culture was not lost. This was especially important at a time when the federal government was terminating formal recognition status for Western Mono tribes and many cultural items were removed from Native possession after being lost, destroyed or sold. The museum incorporated as a private, non-profit 501(c)3 institution in 1966 and in 1970 acquired 1.7 acres of land from the local school district, opening later to the public. Description: Maintains a collection of baskets and artwork by the Mono Indian People. Other tribes are also represented with their baskets and beadwork.

Description: Established to support the Arts Department of the American Indian Center of Chicago. The Gallery is the only Native American owned & operated arts institution in the State of Illinois and is dedicated to providing space for first-voice arts. The Gallery features Native art (post 1960s) and augments exhibits with film screenings, featured speakers, panel discussions, school tours and educator workshops. Trickster's permanent "Wall of Honor" in the first floor gallery is dedicated to Native American veterans, featuring our veteran's photographs, tribal affiliation, and theatre served. The educational component of this exhibit further depicts how Native languages have been used in Code Talker operations in World War II and offers the personal story of Penobscot Elder Charles Shay, WWII D-Day medic. Another section of the exhibit is dedicated to photographs from the "Veterans on the Ice" events hosted by the Chicago Blackhawks. At this event, Native and non-Native veterans are honored at the beginning of the games for their service, and as a way to honor the Native history behind the Chicago Blackhawks' name. To expand awareness of Native veteran's service, the images and stories of these veterans are included in an exhibit that has traveled to the Robert R. McCormick Museum and other institutions and local libraries. A Native arts institution dedicated to meeting the needs of artists by providing a vehicle for artistic expression in all disciplines and at all levels by taking a role in the cultivation, exhibition, and dissemination of contemporary Indigenous American art. Purpose: To address the state of Native America today while sharing thoughts of terminology for the sake of projecting positive images beyond romantic iconography. Gift Shop. Established 2005.

The museum houses artifacts and documents from the tribe's past. The tribal complex is housed in the former Peru High School on 80 W. 6th St, which in 2013 was added to the National Register of Historic Places. Layman said the great money will help convert four former classrooms into museum-quality display areas that will be open to the public. He said the Miami Nation currently has around 100 artifacts that will be on display, as well as annuity documents showing tribal lineage, original copies of land treaties and other correspondences. The group will also seek out other items from tribe members to add to the collection.

The Tunica-Biloxi Museum is home to the "Tunica Treasure," a vast collection of Native American European trade items and other artifacts deposited as grave goods by the Tunica from 1731 to 1764. Repatriation of this collection was the result of a landmark state appeals court decision that provided precedent for the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act of 1990. Much of the initial and ongoing conservation of the collection was done by trained tribal members when the tribe regained possession in the late 1980's. Prior to repatriation, the "Tunica Treasure" went through detailed analysis by Jeffrey P. Brain of Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology, Harvard University.

The collections are located in the Tunica-Biloxi Cultural and Educational Resources Center (CERC), a 40,000-square-foot building including a museum exhibit hall, conservation and restoration laboratory, gift shop, library, auditorium, classrooms, distance learning center, meeting rooms and tribal government offices. Opened 1989.

Ms. Ashley Minner (Lumbee), Secretary; E-mail: secretary@baicmuseum.org
Frieda Minner (Lumbee), Treasurer/Gift Shop Manager
Board members: Keith Colston (Lumbee/Tuscarora); Stephanie Moholt
The museum will introduce the stories of the experiences, cultures and histories of the original inhabitants of Maryland and the Mid-Atlantic region, as well as other tribal communities that have, over several centuries, made Baltimore and Maryland their home. The story of the North Carolina Lumbees, who created the Indian center and are the largest Native American community in Maryland, will be one of the Museum's important themes. Through exhibitions, programming, events and the sale of culturally appropriate merchandise in the gift shop, the BAIC Museum will expand the knowledge of both Native and non-Native people about the richness of these living cultures and the tenacious efforts to maintain those cultures. The Museum will support the efforts of the BAIC and other Native organizations in the ongoing efforts to serve and advocate for the Native Americans. Gift shop.

PISCATAWAY INDIAN MUSEUM & CULTURAL CENTER

16816 Country Ln. • WALDORF, MD 20601
(240) 432-7878; E-mail: piscatawayindians@yahoo.com
Website: <http://www.piscatawayindians.com>
Description: Contains the history and culture of the Piscataway and other native people of the United States. Each exhibit contains historical and contemporary artifacts from the Eastern Woodlands, Plains, Northwest, and Southwest, while demonstrating how location influenced tribal structure, art, and lodging. Other items on display reveal the importance of animals and plants in Piscataway life and how the Piscataway respected their non-human relations. A major attraction of the museum is the full-scale reconstruction of a longhouse, the very type of home used by the Piscataways when first contact was made with the Europeans. Found inside the longhouse are items that would have been common at the time of European contact, such as deer and fox pelts, tobacco leaves, bow and arrows, and medicine pouches. The Center also houses the "Keeper of the Pipe" research room, and the "Our Heritage" gift shop. Serves as an educational institution to preserve the history of the Piscataway Tribe as well as the cultural & natural history of early American times. Resources: Piscataway Trading Post & Gift Shop. Opened 1993.

(662) 334-4684; E-mail: info@wintervillemounds.com
Description: Maintains museum with a collection of Indian artifacts, excavated from the Mounds area. The Native American mounds at Winterville were hand built by a civilization that thrived from about AD 1000 to 1450. Winterville was a gathering place—a site for sacred ceremonies—and originally contained at least 23 mounds. The people who built these great earthworks at Winterville were ancestors of the Chickasaws, Choctaws, and other tribes we know today. Discover the stories of the people who lived here through the mysterious clues they left behind. Archaeological evidence indicates that the Indians who used the Winterville Mounds may have had a civilization similar to that of the Natchez Indians, a Mississippi tribe documented by French explorers and settlers in the early 1700s. The Natchez Indians' society was divided into upper and lower ranks, with a person's social rank determined by heredity through the female line. The chief and other tribal officials inherited their positions as members of the royal family. The elaborate leadership network made mound building by a civilian labor force possible. An explosion of mound construction activity between AD 1200 and 1350 suggests the Winterville chiefdom was a dominant power in the region then. Varieties of pottery indicate contact with far-distant chiefdoms. The people who were responsible for these great earthworks were American Indians, but not Chickasaws, Choctaws, or other tribes we know today. Construction of the mounds at Winterville began about AD 1100, a time when the population was organized in chiefdoms instead of tribes. Many of these chiefdoms were destroyed after the expedition of Hernando de Soto passed through in 1539-43, presumably by European diseases to which the native population had no immunity. The remnants of these groups banded together, creating the contemporary tribes. Library.

NATIONAL NATIVE AMERICAN HALL OF FAME

1720 10th Ave. South Suite 4, #299 • GREAT FALLS, MT 59405
(406) 315-2950; Website: www.nationalhalloffame.org
James Parker Shield (Little Shell Chippewa), Chief Executive Officer
Shane Doyle (Crow), Curriculum
Walter Lamar (Blackfeet), Board President

The National Native American Hall of Fame will serve as a unique resource for identifying and honoring contemporary pathmakers, new heroes, and significant contributors to American society. The major focus of the Hall of Fame will be from the Civil War period up until the present day. This time frame was chosen because the Civil War was a milestone event in Native American history in a unique and "modern" sense because Natives fought on both sides of that national conflict. This phenomenon was happening at the same time that Geronimo and the Apaches, Quanah Parker and the Comanches, and many Plains and western tribes were fighting against U.S. forces in the West.

E-mail: richardpadamczyk@gmail.com

Description: Artifacts of the Indians who inhabited the lower Delaware Valley. The Lenape, known today as the Delaware. In New Jersey, archaeologists arbitrarily divide Native American prehistory into three periods for ease of study: the Paleoindian period (10,000 to 8,000 BC), the Archaic period (8,000 to 1,000 BC), and the Woodland period (1,000 BC to 1600 AD). Earlier Native American sites have been identified in other parts of North America, dating as far back as 14,000 BC. The earliest culture identified in New Jersey is the Paleoindian-age Clovis culture, marked by a distinctive stone tool called a Clovis point. Clovis points are rare spearpoints found throughout North America that have a unique channel formed near the base of the blade. Programs: Educational Series. Publications are available to the public regarding the Indian's culture. Publication: Newsletter.

Native American Ethnography: Includes about 3,500 objects of Native American art and material culture from tribes across North America with an emphasis on the Eastern Woodlands. It is most notable for Iroquoian and Algonquian material culture, including seminal mid-19th century Iroquois collections acquired by Lewis Henry Morgan and the early 20th century research and collections of Seneca anthropologist, Arthur C. Parker. The collection also includes a large number of baskets from southeastern and western tribes, beaded materials from the Apache and Plains Indians, and items from the Northwest Coast and Alaska. The art and culture of New York's Native People today are represented in the Collection of Contemporary Native American Art. Special collections: Johnson Family Collection of Abenaki Basketry and Tools; Research and Collections of Arthur C. Parker; Collection of Contemporary Native American Art. Morgan

Collection--Mid 19th century Seneca ethnographic material; The Beauchamp Collection--Onondaga ethnographic material. Native American Archaeology: The prehistoric archaeology collections at the New York State Museum number over 2 million specimens. Assembled over the last 150 years, these include artifacts and records from fieldwork by former state archaeologists Arthur C. Parker, William A. Ritchie and Robert E. Funk; professional CRM investigations for federal and state-permitted projects; and systematic collecting by avocational archaeologists. Available for research and exhibit loan, these collections document the sweep of Native American prehistory across the New York region. Chronologically, the collections include artifacts from (1) the earliest human inhabitants of New York, beginning 13,000 years ago; (2) early through late Holocene hunter-gatherers; and (3) late prehistoric settlements up to the 15th century A.D. We also curate major collections of proto-historic (16th century A.D.) and contact-era materials from New York Iroquois and Mohican sites. Activities: Annual Algonquian Peoples Seminar in April. Established in 2001 as the only Native American owned and operated nongovernmental, not for profit organization on Long Island dedicated to honoring the Ancestors and living history as Algonquin descendants. Exhibits Shinnecock history spanning over the 10,000 years our people have inhabited this area now called Long Island. Built from Adirondack white pine, the facilities contain 5,000 square feet of exhibition space. The Museum recently added some new cultural material items to its permanent display. Originally on display at the Southampton Historical Museum in 2011, for their exhibition, 10,000 Years of Hunting and Fishing on Long Island, these items that help illustrate the different time periods of Shinnecock history: Paleolithic, Archaic, Woodland and Historic periods for their exhibition. Our Museum has now acquired these items for our main exhibit – A Walk with the People. The mission of the Shinnecock

Cultural Center and Museum (opened in 2001) is to promote awareness, understanding and an appreciation of Shinnecock history and culture. Collections span the six cultural phases of history from paleolithic to historic, consisting of baskets, arrowheads, painted murals, woodcarvings, photographs, whalebone, stuffer animals. Programs: Education, art festivals, oral history. Activities: Monthly cable show "Voices of Native America," Channel 25 cable vision. Archives - documents, books, photos.

INDIAN MUSEUM OF THE CAROLINAS

Rural Heritage Center, 13043 X-Way Rd. • LAURINBURG, NC 28352
(910) 277-2456; E-mail: info@schpc-nc.com
Description: Exhibits Indian archaeological material and modern Native American art and artifacts of North and South Carolina, and the Southeast U.S.

Through the millennia, the region now known as North and South Carolina was home to over 45 different Native American Indian cultures. Among the descendants today are the Lumbee, Cheraw, Cherokee, Tuscarora, Waccamaw, and Catawba. The primary emphasis of the Indian Museum of the Carolinas is to display Carolina Indian life, but you will also find exhibits on groups of other parts of North America and Mesoamerica. Our 40 exhibits offer glimpses of Native American life as it was in the past. From the time of earliest permanent settlement until modern times there have been three primary village types that served the Native Americans our region of the Carolinas: Carolina Bays, Indian Mounds, and Fishing Villages. Additionally, our exhibits include unique items such as an original canoe, projectile points (arrowheads), pottery, and ancient stone tools. Comparative displays show artifacts from other geographic areas. There are two major exhibit areas in the museum: the front room at the entrance focuses on North Carolina Native American history, and a second area includes rotating displays on North Carolina Indians and other tribes. From the exhibits and their interpretations, a visitor can learn about topics ranging from native foods such as nuts, fish, and cattails, to planting corn with digging sticks, playing stickball, and the role of the shaman in religious and healing ceremonies. Reflecting the Indian worldview, displays are arranged in a more circular or topical fashion rather than in a linear, chronological mode (from prehistory to the present); displays depict the contemporary life of local tribes, the Lumbee and the Catawba. Special Programs: Evening speakers program; guided tours. Library.

FORT HILL EARTHWORKS & NATURE PRESERVE

13614 Fort Hill Rd. • HILLSBORO, OH 45133

(800) 283-8905

Fort Hill is one of the best-preserved examples of an ancient hilltop enclosure. Fort Hill was built by American Indians of the Hopewell Culture, who lived in Ohio about 2,000 years ago. Despite the name, Fort Hill was not an actual fort used for warfare, but more likely a ceremonial gathering place. Fort Hill is also a nature preserve, and the 1,300 acres are home to one of southern Ohio's largest mature forests, with many towering old trees. People of the ancient Hopewell culture (100 B.C.–A.D. 500) built the 1½ mile-long earthwork, as well as at least two ceremonial buildings and probably a village in the Brush Creek Valley. Lying at the western edge of the Allegheny Plateau, immediately south of the glacial boundary, this hilly area contains an impressive diversity of bedrock, soils, flora and fauna. There are 11 miles of hiking trails at the preserve, as well as a picnic area and latrines. A museum houses exhibits on the geology and archaeology of the area.

Associate Director, Newark Earthworks Center

E-mail: chaatsmith.1@osu.edu

The Newark Earthworks Center (NEC) is an interdisciplinary academic center of The Ohio State University that develops projects and research about the American Indian cultures that produced the monumental Midwestern earthen architecture in order to advance understanding of the cultural and scientific achievements of American Indians to the world. The NEC's projects emphasize American Indian knowledge of the earthworks landscape in the Ohio River Valley, from human settlement until the present. Since 2006, the NEC has successfully initiated strategies to inform Ohio citizens about brilliant ancient Indigenous earthen architecture and contemporary American Indian issues. The center supports tribal governments' self-determination and cultural sovereignty in their essential roles relating to the preservation, interpretation, and stewardship of pre-contact and historic Indigenous places within their ancestral lands. The NEC seeks to develop respectful reciprocal, sustainable relationships between American Indian tribal governments and Ohio State University faculty, staff, and students to identify research and project goals.

SERPENT MOUND MUSEUM

3850 State Route 73 • PEEBLES, OH 45660

(800) 752-2757; Website: www.ohiohistory.org

Description: One of 63 sites maintained by the Ohio Historical Society. The museum has displays on the prehistoric cultures that occupied the area. Special programs: Archaeology Days Festival; 4th grade educational programs. Serpent Mound is an internationally known National Historic Landmark built by the ancient American Indian cultures of Ohio. It is an effigy mound (a mound in the shape of an animal) representing a snake with a curled tail. Nearby are three burial mounds—two created by the Adena culture (800 B.C.–A.D. 100), and one by the Fort Ancient culture (A.D. 1000–1650). Thousands of years ago, Native Ohioans populated the landscape with mounds and massive earthworks. In the late 19th century, Harvard University archaeologist Frederic Ward Putnam excavated Serpent Mound, but he found no artifacts in the Serpent that might allow archaeologists to assign it to a particular culture. Based largely on the nearby presence of Adena burial mounds, later archaeologists attributed the effigy to the Adena culture that flourished from 800 B.C. to A.D. 100. This theory on the site's origin was accepted until a 1991 site excavation used radiocarbon dating to determine that the mound was approximately 900 years old. This would suggest that the builders of the Serpent belonged to the Fort Ancient culture (A.D. 1000–1500). In 2014, another team of archaeologists presented new radiocarbon dates for the Serpent suggesting that it was built by the Adena culture at around 300 B.C. More work is needed to clarify the age of Serpent Mound. The significance of Serpent Mound and other ancient Ohio earthworks has garnered international attention. In 2008, Serpent Mound and eight other Ohio American Indian earthworks were selected by the United States Department of the Interior for inclusion on the United States' Tentative List of sites to be submitted to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) for inscription on the prestigious World Heritage List.

PIQUA HISTORICAL AREA STATE MEMORIAL WOODLAND INDIAN MUSEUM

9845 N. Hardin Rd. • PIQUA, OH 45356-9707

(800) 752-2619; (937) 773-2522 Fax 773-4311

Website: www.ohiohistory.org

Description: Restored 1829 home & outbuildings of federal Indian agent John Johnston. He was well respected by the Indians of Ohio and handled many of the important treaties of his era. The site has been recently renovated to include exhibits telling the story of the Woodland peoples of Ohio from the time of Euro-American contact to 1843. The impact of trade between these people is a major focus, as is the story of the Pickawillany village site, also a part of this 250-acre State Memorial. The story is told through objects of the time period, many from the site itself, and a life-size diorama featuring a trade scene between the Indians and an English trader. There are several interactive exhibits containing artifacts of Native American tools, art, canoes, costumes, etc. A collection of McKenney-Hall prints as well as Catlin prints are displayed. Museum shop. Opened 1972.

CADDO INDIAN TERRITORY MUSEUM & LIBRARY

110 Buffalo St. • CADDO, OK 74729

(580) 367-2787

The Caddo Heritage Museum maintains permanent exhibits of traditional silverwork, pottery, artwork and archival photographs. The work of Caddo silversmiths Merle Keyes and Son Supernaw is currently displayed. The women's hair combs, worn as part of their dance regalia, incorporate the intricate and delicate traditional Caddo designs. The engraved bottles, bowls and jars currently on display represent the Caddoan traditions from ca. 1000 AD to the late 1600's contact period. Many of these pieces are from the Southwest Arkansas sites. The curvilinear lines, distinctive shapes, and deep colors all aid the archeologists in recognizing these Caddo vessels. The work of Jeri Redcorn, our present-day Caddo potter, represents the continuation of the distinctive pottery created in the past. Also part of the permanent collection are large duplications of archival photographs. These images continue to present the visitor with a visual glimpse of the previous generations of Caddo people.

Fort Washita was built in 1842 as the southwestern-most military post of the United States. The mission of Fort Washita was to protect the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes from the Plains Indians. Fort Washita operated through 1865 and still stands today as a historic site and museum where visitors can learn what life was like before and during the Civil War. After the war, the fort was granted to the Chickasaw Nation and later the Dawes Commission allotted the fort and surrounding land to the Charles and Abbie Davis Colbert family.

The new museum, a 175,000 square-foot museum, is focused on the cultures, histories, and current stories of Oklahoma's Naïve peoples. It's the first of its kind, and aims to educate about the unique cultures, diversity, history, and contributions of the First American nations. Inside the museum, visitors will have a chance to explore artifacts, arts, and crafts from each of the 39 tribal nations featured in the museum, along with participating in demonstrations, special events, and even taste Native cuisine. Some of the exhibit highlights include the Origins Theater, a 320-degree screen looping animation about creation stories from four tribes in Oklahoma; the Tribal Nations Gallery, highlighting tribal origin stories and historical accounts from a Native first-person perspective, and insights into Native culture, curated by members of tribes in Oklahoma today. Opened August, 2021.

STANDING BEAR PARK, MUSEUM & EDUCATION CENTER

601 Standing Bear Parkway • PONCA CITY, OK 74601
(580) 762-1514; Kathy Adams, Director

Description: The 63-acre park encompasses more than eight fully developed acres that includes off street parking; a one-acre pond with central arrowhead island; a walking trail winding through native grasses and wildflowers to the monument site, and a shaded memorial grove at a peaceful sitting area along the way. A monumental tribute to all Native Americans, this 22-foot bronze statue is of Ponca Chief Standing Bear, created by Cowboy Artist of America, Oreland C. Joe. The magnificent monument of Standing Bear is majestic as a very realistic depiction of Standing Bear - with right hand extended to the east and his eyes, gentle and wise, overlook the ancient Arkansas River valley, where the original Chief Standing Bear is believed to have walked more than 100 years ago. A colorful 60-foot diameter circular viewing court is located at the feet of Standing Bear and contains large sandstone boulders around its perimeter affixed with the official brass seals of the six area tribes, Osage, Pawnee, Otoe-Missouria, Kaw, Tonkawa and Ponca. The names of eight clans of the Ponca Tribe are inlaid in the floor of the plaza in earth tone colors of terra cotta red, pine green and various shades of browns. A center pool reflects the sky and at its center the eternal flame of "grandfather fire" burns on a large round sandstone pedestal. The published mission of the dedicated group is "To educate all nationalities about the Native American heritage and the important role Native Americans have played in developing our country diverse culture; To promote better understanding and communication among all our nations cultures; To increase economic and educational opportunities for Native Americans; and To provide a catalyst to enhance the self-worth of all Native Americans. Collections feature clothing, utensils, photographs, weapons, art, musical instruments, and ceremonial materials of the tribes of the Ponca City area: the Osage, Kaw, Ponca, and Otoe; also, Hopi pottery and kachinas; relics from the early French-Indian trading post in Oklahoma; Northwest Coast material, and Quilteute and other northern tribes' material.  Tacoma Art Museum's Northwest art collection does not include historical material by Native artisans and artists. Starting in 1991, TAM began collecting works by later 20th- and 21st- century Native artists whose works bridge both historical and contemporary practice. The collection numbers 130 works in all media with particular strengths in prints and photographs. Artists include Joe Feddersen, James Lavadour, Sharron Nelson, James Nieto, Preston Singletary, and Matika Wilbur, among others. Recent acquisitions include the monumental outdoor sculpture Blanket Stories: Transportation Object, Generous Ones, Trek by Marie Watt, Wendy Red Star's Four Seasons series, and two woven sculptures by Gail Tremblay. In-depth collections showcasing the historic artistic traditions of many Northwest Native peoples may be found at tribal and regional museums and cultural centers throughout the Northwest. Tacoma Art Museum sits on ancestral Puyallup tribal land. To learn more about Puyallup history and culture visit Puyallup Tribal Cultural Center.

E-mail: bmcnab@thebrintonmuseum.org

The Brinton Museum was established as an institution dedicated to American Indian Art & Culture, as well as to American Fine and Decorative Art. In the 1920s and 1930s Bradford Brinton collected American Indian art and artifacts from the Plains to the Southwest and to the Northwest Coast, from baskets to beaded dresses, Navajo weavings to painted parfleche, headdresses and hide shirts to Hopi and Chilquat robes. The newly gifted Goelet and Edith Gallatin Collection of American Indian Art continues to build on this mission of collecting and exhibiting the finest of American Indian and especially Plains Nations' art and artifacts. After being on loan to the Art Institute of Chicago for the last 40 years, it was recently gifted to the museum by the Foundation for the Preservation of American Indian Art and Culture. Currently on exhibit in the John and Adrienne Mars Gallery of American Indian Art, To Honor The Plains Nations features more than 60 pieces of this extensive gift, plus several special selections from The Bradford Brinton Memorial Collection and, in addition, several newly acquired items. American Indian Art & Artifacts throughout the museum include blankets and robes, war bonnets, painted war shirts, beaded dresses, jewelry, horse gear, blanket strips and more. American Indians are also the central subject of many of The Brinton Museum's Western Art paintings, drawings and etchings, as well as sculpture by Frederic Remington, Charles M. Russell and Edward Borein, to name just a few. Exhibits Native American objects of art - costumes, bead and quillwork, tools, baskets, blankets, weapons, & interpretive materials; mostly Plains tribes, but some from Southwest and Northwest Coast. Library. Museum Store. Opened 1961.

THE RUPERT COSTO LIBRARY OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN

Special Collections & University Archives, University of California Riverside
Rivera Library, P.O. Box 5900 • RIVERSIDE, CA 92517-5900

Description: Consists of about 7,000 volumes and over 9,000 documents, pamphlets, tape recordings, slides, and art work. The Library was formed by Rupert and Jeannette Costo when they merged their private collections after their marriage in 1954. The material was collected over a period of fifty years. In 1964 the Costo's founded the American Indian Historical Society in San Francisco. The library is one of the most important collections of research materials relating to the Native Americans in the United States and the world. The Costo's generously gave their collection to the University of California, Riverside in 1986. The Costo Library is of great significance to scholars and researchers in American Indian history and supports the chair in American Indian History endowed by the American Indian Historical Society and the Costo's. The books and archival materials in the collection cover the span of Indian history from the arrival of the first settlers, over 55,000 years ago, up to the present day. The materials chiefly deal with Indian history and culture of the past four centuries after the settlement of America by Europeans. Most of the materials are scholarly books published in the last fifty years. There are reprints of older classic works which are very scarce today. These items are shelved in the Reading Room. The rarer items—old books, art albums, scarce booklets, issued by individual tribes and researchers—are shelved in Special Collections & Archives. Documents and private correspondence have been collected directly from individuals and Indian tribal leaders and are shelved in Special Collections & Archives. Among these are nine boxes containing documentation about Indian water rights. Framed pictures of original artwork, historic prints and photos are part of the treasure (along with baskets and pottery on display in the Library). These materials make the library extremely useful to the researcher. The Rupert and Jeannette Costo papers, housed in Special Collections & Archives of the Tomás Rivera Library at the University of California, Riverside, is a collection consisting of printed material (correspondence, typescripts, original manuscripts and ephemera), film and photographs collected by Jeannette and Rupert Costo. This collection is largely dedicated to information on American Indians with an emphasis on California Indians and contemporary issues. Water, land, hunting and fishing rights, sovereignty, gaming, language and education are among the major subject areas. A portion of this collection remains unprocessed. Please contact Special Collections & Archives for additional information regarding this material.

Description: The Information Resources Dept. is comprised of a Research Library, a Children's Research Library, and an Archives and Special Collections Department. The Research Library's collection contains over 40,000 titles of current and historical works on the histories and cultures of indigenous peoples north of Mexico, including Canada, Alaska & Hawaii, with an emphasis on 20th century materials. Print formats include books, serials, maps, pamphlets and brochures. The collection includes visual and audio recordings and electronic media. The collection consists of 800+ titles including journals, magazines, newspapers, newsletters and auction catalogs supporting the Library's mission. It includes a large collection of tribal publications. Archives and Special Collections are comprised of two interconnected collecting areas. The Archives is a repository for the historical materials and non-current records of the Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation. It also holds the family papers of tribal members. The Special Collections contains a variety of materials that document the histories and cultures of Native America, including letters and other manuscripts, maps, pamphlets, ephemera, rare books, and photographs. The Children's Library introduces students to the Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation and other North American indigenous peoples through programs and through its collections. The Children's Library serves students through 8th grade, adults who work with children, and researchers of children's literature. The collection contains current and historical materials by and about Native Americans, and includes fiction and non-fiction books, serials, reference works, and multimedia. The Education Collection supports the educational aims of the museum and includes materials on educational theory and curriculum development relating to Native American studies. Special programs: Educational workshops, lectures and orientations. Opened 1998.

Description: A weekly newspaper and E-weekly newsletter serving 21 Indian reservations in North and South Dakota, Nebraska and Montana. Washington, DC bureau, it also covers the U.S. Capitol from an Indian perspective. The San Manuel Band of Mission Indians has awarded a $1 million grant to Indian Country Today that will be used to help fund a weekly national newscast and hire new journalism talent. The two-year grant (2020-22) was announced on Feb. 3, 2020 as the nonprofit news organization expands its digital footprint on coverage of American Indian and Alaska Native issues. The grant makes the tribe a founding partner for a planned Indian Country Today national news broadcast. "We are excited about this partnership with Indian Country Today, a news organization that has been a positive presence and influence throughout the country for decades," San Manuel Band of Mission Indians Chairwoman, Lynn Valbuena, said. "Indian nations have a duty to help shape news and information about Native communities. This is a wonderful opportunity for Indian Country to participate in this important endeavor." Indian Country Today's television program will include reports from tribes across the country and Phoenix as well as from the news organization's bureaus in Washington, D.C. and Anchorage, Alaska. Indian Country Today is based in Phoenix at ASU's Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication. Indian Country Today has been producing video news stories & daily digital stories on its platform IndianCountryToday.com. "This grant is so important because it so significantly advances our mission," Indian Country Today Editor Mark Trahan, Shoshone-Bannock, said. "We are also pleased that San Manuel is our first founding partner. The tribe already has a legacy in media philanthropy and has demonstrated its commitment to changing the Indigenous narrative in positive directions." Indian Country Today Executive Producer Patty Talahongva, Hopi, said the grant will create a newscast that has never been seen before in Indian Country. "The stories we produce will include the American Indian and Alaska Native perspective," Talahongva said. "We have so many stories to tell and issues to cover that are not currently being covered in the media. Perspective is key. Context is key. 25,000 circulation (largest independent Indian-owned weekly). $48 per year, local; $83 per year, Canada and Mexico; $227 per year, overseas. Advertising. Begun 1981.

 Gary and Carmen Davis launched Native Business to promote and advance Native American business, entrepreneurship and economic development. Native Business accomplishes this through our digital platforms (online and via our mobile app) by featuring news, success stories, promoting best practices and informing readers about the latest business innovation and trends. Native Business also empowers enterprises and entrepreneurs across Indian Country by providing video and podcast tools to motivate and inspire new generations of Native entrepreneurs by sharing the wisdom of various business thought leaders. In addition to engaging readers and creating new conversations with its content, Native Business presents the annual Native Business Summit at the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Our next summit will once again take place at the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino in Tulsa, Oklahoma from September 1-3, 2020 with Cherokee Nation Businesses serving as the presenting level sponsor of the event. The Native Business Summit will bring together Tribal and Alaska Native leadership, featured speakers, thought leaders and present informative breakout sessions and trainings, a business tradeshow, the Native Business Golf Classic and plenty of networking. Through its various platforms, Native Business shines a spotlight on the best that Indian Country has to offer and assists Tribes, Alaska Native Corporations and Native business leaders with growing opportunity for future generations of Native people. Annual Native business summit, in May. Monthly. $8.95. Advertising. Digital edition available.

Established in 2011, Western Native Voice (WNV) is a non-profit, non-partisan organization working to increase Native American participation and engagement in voting and self-determination. We work to nurture and empower new native leaders and impact policies affecting Native Americans through community organizing, education, leadership, and advocacy. We are engaged on all seven Montana Indian reservations and engaged in major Montana urban centers because approximately half of Montana's native population lives off the reservation.

Mission: To engage Native Americans in building political and personal power to address local community challenges. To support and encourage Native community members to step up and be a voice for their families and communities through the civic engagement process and public policies that affect their lives and wellbeing. To strive for a world absent of discrimination and inequality, where every human has equal access to safety and success.

With over 25 years of experience, Carter Ledyard's Native American Law practice concentrates on corporate finance, including commercial lending, bond issuance, tax-exempt lending, refinancings, workouts, restructurings, joint ventures and general corporate matters for Native American Tribes and those doing business with them. Our attorneys have twice won "Deal of the Year" awards from the Native American Finance Officers Association (NAFOA) for their work on innovative tax-exempt financings. Our practice group leader Steven Paul McSloy is one of the nation's leading experts on Native American Law and finance and has worked on some of the largest and most complex financial transactions in Indian Country, acting as lead counsel in financing, casinos, hotels, retail outlets, energy projects and government buildings and infrastructure on tribal lands. Steve served as the General Counsel of the Oneida Indian Nation of New York and its Turning Stone Casino and teaches American Indian Law at Columbia Law School and for the California Tribal College. Our practice has been consistently rated at the top of the profession and sought out by both Indian nations and those doing business with them for efficient and expert advice in getting deals done.

Chestnut has considerable experience in Federal Indian Law and intergovernmental relations. Our firm includes both Native and non-Native attorneys who are dedicated to serving the needs of our tribal clients. Two senior attorneys each have over 20 years experience in Federal Indian Law. They continue to work with tribal, state, local and federal agencies to encourage positive government-to-government relations. Our attorneys have represented our tribal clients at the state and federal level on matters involving the judicial, legislative, and administrative branches of those governments. Our firm is aware of the challenges that both Indian and non-Indian clients face when they deal with the uncertainty of tribal, state, and federal regulatory and jurisdiction issues concerning Indian Country & Indian transactions. Sovereignty Chestnut Law Offices, P.A. represented the San Juan Pueblo Gaming Commission in a successful defense of the limited waiver of sovereign immunity in the 2001 Gaming Compact. See Kosiba v. San Juan Pueblo, 2006-NMCA-057. We participate in the Tribal Supreme Court Project as counsel for Tribal Amici in state and federal cases to protect Indian tribal sovereignty issues. Tribal Self-Determination: Chestnut Law Offices, P.A. works with tribal clients to assist them in drafting tribal laws and policies consistent with individual Pueblo customs and beliefs. Attorneys also help tribal clients understand and comment on federal laws, regulations, and policies that may affect the ability of tribal governments to direct the future of their lands and people.

With knowledge and an understanding of history and culture, and with broad legal experience, we represent Indian tribes and other clients in the dynamic and complex fields of federal Indian law and tribal law. Our Indian law practice draws on the overall resources of Conner & Winters and the talents of our attorneys in other disciplines, including corporate and securities, energy, labor and employment, real estate, and tax. Our attorneys who practice in the field of Indian law have experience in: Major business transactions in Indian country, including financing, securities, Indian lands, regulatory, and other aspects of such transactions; Tribal representation and tribal law, including sovereignty matters, Indian property rights, business law, employment law, self-governance, tribal taxation, economic development, housing, and other areas; Environmental law and litigation, including actions involving CERCLA and natural resources damages recovery; Tribal trust matters, including litigation to enforce the federal trust responsibility to tribes and individual Indians relating to federal management of their trust assets; Cultural properties law, including the protection of cultural and historic sites and cultural artifacts under statutes such as the National Historic Preservation Act (Section 106) and the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act; Major construction projects in Indian country; Energy law and Indian country minerals development; Indian land title matters and realty transactions, including areas such as fee-to-trust, Indian land consolidation, and others; Indian Country litigation and appeals. The following summarizes some of the key areas in which we offer legal services to our Indian law and tribal clients. Our Commitment to Indian Country We have a commitment to all of our clients and to Indian Country that goes beyond business. We regularly purchase powwow ads and sponsor dances, tribal golf tournaments, and other client activities in Indian Country. Recently, it has been our privilege to sponsor events of the National Congress of American Indians, and to contribute to the NCAI's Supreme Court project. We sponsor an award for the American Indian LLM program at the University of Tulsa College of Law. We provide legal assistance to an American Indian theater group. We have hosted roundtables for tribal and business leaders.

For a century, Davis Graham and Stubbs LLP has served clients in the Rocky Mountain West – this history has given us a wealth of experience in the field of Indian law. Today, our attorneys represent companies doing business with tribes in a wide range of matters, and companies with project development that have other tribal concerns. We have handled matters involving Indian lands and other Indian law issues throughout the U.S., including New Mexico (Navajo, Jicarilla), Arizona (Navajo, White Mountain Apache, San Carlos Apache), Oklahoma (Osage), Colorado (Southern Ute, Ute Mountain Ute), Utah (Northern Ute), Wyoming (Shoshone-Arapahoe), Montana (Blackfeet, Crow, Fort Peck), North Dakota (Ft. Berthold, Yankton Sioux), Virginia (Mattaponi), and Nevada (Western Shoshone, Paiute). Because many Native American religious beliefs have connections to certain land areas, both on and off Indian reservations, the sensitive issue of Native American sacred sites increasingly arises in regard to project development. This occurs throughout the range of development in the West, from extractive and renewable energy projects, to transmission, transportation, recreation an educational facilities and activities. DGS attorneys are skilled in helping clients navigate this often highly-charged issue, from negotiating with tribes and federal agencies on mitigation or project re-siting, to litigating claims that clients' projects or activities harm such sites. They assist clients throughout the due diligence and negotiation process, including complex tribal jurisdictional issues, agreements under the Indian Mineral Leasing Act and the Indian Mineral Development Act, the HEARTH Act and obtaining the necessary approvals from the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA).

Represents clients on Indian law issues throughout the U.S. and Canada. Has extensive experience and knowledge of Indian law, tribal rights and other issues impacting Native American, First Nations' peoples and those doing business with them. In addition to representing a wide range of tribes and tribal business enterprises, including tribal casinos ND casino regulatory agencies, we counsel local governments, private companies and other non-Indian clients in their business dealings on Indian reservations or with tribal peoples. They actively represent clients in economic development transactions, including gaming, as well as assist in resolving the complex issues that arise regarding tribal sovereignty and jurisdiction tax matters. Team lawyers also litigate these and other cases involving Indian law, tribal rights and land claims in federal, state and tribal courts. In terms of project development, our team works to assure that projects are fully compliant with applicable laws and regulations while ensuring their economic integrity. Our tribal clients frequently seek our assistance in resolving problems with federal, state and local government agencies, and we always strive to solve those problems quickly and economically. Among the Indian Law practice's areas of expertise are: Providing general representation to tribes, including securing status clarification for unrecognized tribes; developing and drafting tribal constitutions, tribal codes, bylaws and ordinances; and assisting with land claims; Organizing & advising tribal business entities, including telephone companies and economic development agencies; Assuring protection of tribal trust resources and the environment, including resolving matters related to claims and title; water rights and fishing; hunting and gathering rights; and cultural resource protection; Assisting with all phases of tribal gaming and development of other business structures; Negotiating and documenting tribal casino financing; Negotiating leases for commercial developments on Indian reservations, including power plants, shopping centers and golf courses.

Throughout Oklahoma and in states from California to Iowa and Missouri, Doerner represents tribal councils and business committees on governance and economic development issues related to their sovereign entity status. We have advised all the major Oklahoma tribes since the state's tribal governments began major reorganizations in the late 1970s, and today assist tribes of all sizes in structuring their bylaws and codes, resolving inter- and intra-tribal disputes and administering their court systems. As tribes continue to expand gaming and non-gaming business enterprises, Offers advice on structuring trust ownership arrangements, arranging bond and other financing, and dealing with the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), National Indian Gaming Commission (NIGC) and relevant state agencies. They have set up tribal gaming ordinances, negotiated pre-opening agreements for casinos and handled everything from labor agreements to contracts and licenses with gaming companies and suppliers, understanding that the economic interests of each tribe, and each company doing business in Indian Country, Provides tribal governments representation that respects their sovereign status. In emerging issues such as payday lending, water rights and renewable energy generation, they help tribes, businesses and regulators balance legal and economic concerns. Increasingly, tribes are investing in their own economic development, and Doerner provides insights to structure trust arrangements and establish joint ventures that advance tribal interests. Our lawyers are diligent in protecting the interests of smaller tribes as well as major tribal entities; and having expanded our practice as tribal governments have evolved, we work as partners with tribal clients to respect traditional values while seizing new opportunities.

Primarily works with tribal governments – Tribal Councils, Business Committees and other governing bodies, tribal staff, and tribal enterprises on the wide variety of issues that Indian tribes face on a daily basis. We attend Tribal Council meetings and provide advice on issues that we are requested to address or that may come up. We prepare legal opinions and give legal advice on a wide range of issues. We represent tribal governments in agency and court proceedings, negotiations, meetings, and anywhere else we are requested. We spend a substantial amount of time on-site with our tribal governments providing face-to-face advice. Represents Tribes, tribal governments, tribal employees and tribal members in a wide variety of court proceedings, defending against attempts to attack tribal sovereignty and jurisdiction and strongly advocate for those interests. Represents tribes in contract actions and gaming-related disputes. We represent tribes in extremely complex treaty rights litigation, and recently participated in a 23-day federal court trial involving ocean treaty fishing rights. We have litigated hundreds of Indian Child Welfare Act cases for many different tribal clients in many different states. We handle a wide range of appellate cases in state and federal courts in different states and in federal appellate circuits. Our firm has over 30 reported appellate decisions on an array of Indian law issues. Tribal governments deal with the federal government and surrounding state and local governments on a daily basis. We represent tribes on a wide variety of jurisdictional and inter-governmental issues, and frequently negotiate inter-governmental agreements between our tribal clients and federal, state, local governments and other Indian tribes. We assist our tribal clients in cooperating with surrounding governments on issues of mutual interest.

Serves the legal needs of Indian tribes and the businesses that interact with them. They have worked on tribal financings totaling more than $10 billion and involving more than 120 tribes in 21 states. Projects include casinos, hotels, convention centers, infrastructure, and other investments. Working with tribal borrowers, lenders, developers, credit enhancers and underwriters, they handle transactions involving an array of financing tools, including bank loans, credit facilities, taxable and tax-exempt bonds, and bond offerings. In addition to financing transactions, they also maintain an active, nationwide Indian law practice where they represent tribes, tribal agencies and businesses, and other entities on a wide variety of topics affecting Indian country, especially business and commercial matters. They represent clients on general federal-Indian law issues, land into trust, Indian land determinations, BIA leases and approvals, IGRA, gaming compliance and tribal gaming commission matters, environmental law & regulations, taxation, federal recognition, labor and employment matters, construction matters, energy projects, and pro bono matters including Indian Child Welfare Act appeals and cultural items repatriation. They regularly represent tribes in litigation matters before federal and state courts and other bodies and they have substantial experience drafting tribal codes, ordinances, resolutions, and constitutional amendments. Their attorneys have years of experience with the BIA and NIGC and with tribal-state compact and gaming ordinance matters, which enables us to efficiently guide our clients through complicated and challenging federal processes.

Provides legal services to American Indian Tribes of the Southwest covering a wide range of practice areas related to business and development both on and off Indian lands. Representation of client interests in the area of Indian Law often draws upon the diverse and substantial specialized resources within the firm ranging from government relations to taxation. This includes drawing upon knowledge of the challenges of commercial transactions in Indian Country, which the firm's managing partner, Tim Berg, helped address through a new national model secured transactions law for America's tribes. Released in 2005, the Model Tribal Secured Transactions Act was drafted by a committee of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, chaired by Mr. Berg. The model act provides a secured transactions law for American Indian tribes modeled after the Uniform Commercial Code Article 9, which is the basis for commercial transactions across the country and is designed to assist the country's tribes, tribal entities and members to secure financing for commercial ventures. Offices in Denver, Las Vegas, Nogales, Reno & Tucson.

Mission: to support tribal governments and their attorneys in protecting tribal sovereignty, enhancing tribal self-government and promoting the welfare of tribal members. The Indian Nations Practice Group provides a full range of legal services to Indian nations, tribal housing authorities, tribal corporations and other Indian country entities, with a focus on (1) business and economic development, (2) environmental protection, (3) renewable energy development and (4) housing development. Tribal practice areas include: Business and Economic Development, including advice to tribes and tribal enterprises relating to legal infrastructure formation of tribal development corporations, Energy Development, Environmental Protection, Finance, Health, including advice to tribal clinics on operations, professional contracting, risk management and issues arising under the Self-Determination and Indian Health Care Improvement Acts. Housing, Inter-Governmental Affairs, Intra-Governmental Affairs, including development of tribal laws that advance self-determination; improve stability and enhance sovereignty, performance of confidential internal audits by the firms' White Collar Defense & Investigations Practice Group and representation of tribal election boards and ethics boards. Labor & Employment, Litigation in tribal, federal and state courts, including treaty rights matters, declaratory actions to prevent improper assertions of regulatory authority by state and local governments and other initiatives to protect tribal sovereignty and advance tribes' business interests. Real Estate Development, Tax. The basic concept of Godfrey & Kahn's Indian Nations Practice Group is to combine the firm's expertise in Indian law and tribal law with the expertise of members of the firm's other practice groups (e.g. business, environmental, energy, housing, finance, tax, employment, labor, government law, litigation, real estate and employee benefits) to provide the best possible service to tribal clients. Members of the Indian Nations Practice Group are selected based on the relevance of their practice to the needs of tribal clients and their ability to master the Indian and tribal law dimensions of their practice area. The firm draws on the expertise of attorneys outside the team as necessary. Their team consists of a core team of attorneys specialized in federal Indian law and tribal law and additional attorneys who specialize in their separate practice areas (business, finance, environment, energy, employment, labor, employee benefits, tax, health care, government affairs, real estate, housing and litigation) but who have also invested the time necessary to learn the Indian law and tribal law dimensions of their practice. This team approach is designed to deliver the highest quality legal services possible to our tribal clients. The firm demonstrates its commitment to Indian country through: Supporting tribal leaders and attorneys by providing, free of charge, a monthly legal update; Sponsoring legal workshops and conferences to keep clients current in Indian law developments; Avoiding representation of entities in matters that whose interests are adverse to tribal sovereignty; Providing pro bono representation of tribally-owned startup businesses through the First American Capital Corporation/G&K Native business assistance program; Representation of nonprofits devoted to advancement of economic development, housing, environmental protection and cultural preservation in Indian country; Supporting scholarship programs for Indian students.

Since the 1950s, Gowling WLG has been at the forefront of Indigenous law in Canada. They've worked alongside Canada's First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples in landmark self-government agreements, resource development projects and Supreme Court cases. We've also acted for project proponents and governments at every level. This singular legacy enables us to provide you with sophisticated legal advice in every aspect of Indigenous law — delivering practical, cost-effective solutions that help you advance your vision and achieve your goals. Gowling WLG is home to one of the largest and most respected Indigenous law practices in Canada. The needs and aspirations of Indigenous communities continue to grow in scope & complexity. Accordingly, the practice of Indigenous law increasingly demands specialized expertise in a wide range of areas. As a full-service law firm, Gowling WLG is equipped to meet your diverse legal needs — from treaty rights and inherent rights, land claims, self-government, taxes and trusts to energy, mining, economic development and environmental matters. We've served as trusted legal counsel to Canada's Indigenous peoples for over 50 years, and we're proud to have these same communities reflected in our own team. We actively recruit lawyers of Indigenous ancestry and support numerous initiatives that promote their advancement in the legal profession.

Specializes in legal issues in Indian Country means understanding that every day is different for Tribes and their partners. Just as tribal governance and commerce covers the waterfront of legal issues, so does our practice. We have successfully negotiated multi-million dollar deals, drafted a wide range of tribal laws – from day-care regulations to burial codes, and litigated cases about hunting rights, Indian gaming, and tribal laws. But our commitment to legal excellence in Indian Country runs throughout each of these areas. Click on this list to explore the issues that we resolve most frequently: Business and Commercial Transactions; Environment and Natural Resources; Governance; Gaming; Litigation; Taxation. Their attorneys have worked in-house with tribes and as outside counsel to draft, review, and revise all types of tribal laws, from resolutions and ordinances to constitutions and bylaws. They have managed all aspects of complex federal litigation from treaty research to selecting expert witnesses to assisting in the development and presentation of Tribe's treaty case. Our attorneys have also successfully guided Tribes through the settlement and mediation process as an alternative to continued litigation. They have particular expertise in litigation concerning jurisdiction to tax tribal assets, tribal activities, tribal income, and on-reservation businesses. Activities: Assisted tribes in drafting and administering judicial codes, probate codes, civil and criminal codes, juvenile codes, and a variety of other laws; Developed trust and other benefit programs for tribal minors and adults; assisted tribes in negotiating and administering self-determination contracts; Developed tribal employment policies and procedures; Assisted tribes in implementing business-licensing ordinances, natural-resource regulations, zoning and building codes, ordinances governing tribal-business-enterprise development, and tribal membership; Drafted comprehensive tribal codes to govern all aspects of on-reservation commercial activity and taxation; Drafted law-enforcement agreements between tribes and local law-enforcement authorities to empower tribal police to provide services throughout reservations; and revised existing tribal constitutions and assisted tribes through all stages of securing approvals necessary to hold a federal secretarial election. Gaming: The attorneys at Hogen Adams have comprehensive tribal-gaming experience. We have negotiated and successfully closed gaming-development deals across the country and outside of the United States. In the specific area of Indian Gaming, we have extensive experience with gaming contract and regulatory-compliance issues both as attorney appearing before, and sitting on, the National Indian Gaming Commission.

Jacobson, Magnuson, Anderson & Halloran, P.C. is one of the premier Indian-law firms in the United States. Located in Saint Paul, Minnesota, we enjoy a national reputation for excellence in providing legal services to Indian tribes and non-Indian commercial interests on Indian-law issues. Founded in 1983, Jacobson Law prides itself on its responsiveness to client needs, efficiency of service, and expansive expertise in Indian law. Our lawyers have extensive and diverse experience representing tribes, federal agencies, state and local governments, as well as private interests, and are committed to providing responsive, comprehensive, and cost effective services to their clients. Indian law is a specialized, complicated, and multi-jurisdictional practice that encompasses not only a legal component, but a cultural component as well. Our experience in Indian Country and our ability to weave together the legal and cultural aspects of our clients' needs enables us to excel in the practice of Indian law. Half of our shareholders are members of federally recognized Indian tribes, so we appreciate cultural and ethnic diversity among our clients and understand the need to work cooperatively to ensure that our services respond to a community's specific needs. Since 1983, our philosophy has remained quite simple: provide outstanding, yet affordable, legal services for Indian tribes and businesses, not just in Indian Country but throughout the United States. This philosophy inspires everything we do. Half of shareholders are members of federally recognized Indian tribes with Indian law as the centerpiece of the firm. General counsel to Indian tribes, tribal governments, and other tribal enterprises. Represents both Indian tribes and non-Indian commercial interests and governmental interests with respect to Indian law issues throughout the U.S. Established 1973.

The team's lawyers are equipped to provide general counsel services for tribes, which face the same issues as governments and corporations. Their service areas include litigation, investigations, and government relations matters involving sovereign immunity, water rights, taxation, sacred sites protection, treaties, reservation land status, tribal governance, gaming, energy, lending, land use and management, energy development, and labor and employment, among other issues. Lawyers in Jenner & Block's Native American Law Practice have represented tribes in high-stakes matters at all levels of litigation. Last week, a firm team led by Appellate and Supreme Court Practice Chair Ian Heath Gershengorn obtained a critical victory for Indian Country in the US Supreme Court in McGirt v. Oklahoma that holds the federal government to its treaty obligations by recognizing that almost half of Oklahoma remains an Indian reservation, as promised almost 200 years ago in treaties with the Creek Nation. In 2019, Partner Adam G. Unikowsky won another major Supreme Court tribal treaty rights case on behalf of the Yakama Nation in Washington State Department of Licensing v. Cougar Den, Inc. that upheld the tribe's rights under the Yakama Treaty of 1855. "Jenner & Block's landmark Supreme Court wins upholding tribal treaty rights have been an inspiration throughout Indian Country. These successes, along with the team's outstanding record, its history of government service, and its genuine commitment to social justice, shows why the combination of our practices brings exceptional value to our tribal and other clients," said Mr. Galbraith. The firm has also achieved several important victories for the Cayuga Nation, including in March when a New York federal judge vindicated its sovereign right to game under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act after a village attempted to enforce an anti-gaming ordinance against the tribe. Partner David W. DeBruin led that effort.

K&L Gates Indian Law lawyers understand the issues this expansion has raised and have extensive experience handling a wide variety of matters involving tribes and their business partners in Alaska, the Pacific Northwest, Pennsylvania, California, Michigan, Oklahoma, and Washington, DC. Our lawyers and public policy professionals have advised public and private clients, local governmental agencies, and Indian tribes on how to address and resolve issues involving many areas of Indian law. K&L Gates attorneys have helped clients with disputes, treaty issues, complicated real estate transactions in Indian Country, and Indian property rights outside Indian Country for water rights and access to hunting and fishing sites. We have represented local and regional governments on treaty matters and major litigation, and have represented tribes and other parties on policy matters in Washington, D.C. Because our experience includes working with both public and private entities, in addition to Indian tribes, we collaborate with many other groups at K&L Gates, including public policy, real estate, healthcare, litigation, tax, banking, intellectual property, and labor and employment. This interaction has helped us offer a full contingent of services to tribes and to other clients on Indian law matters. Represents tribes and Alaska Native Corporations. Our clients include both tribal governments and member-owned businesses. The firm addresses corporate and business issues and the interplay with treaty rights; taxation matters; federal and state litigation; and government lobbying. K&L Gates has advised on law and procedures created by IGRA under which Native American tribes may conduct gaming activities on Indian lands. We have analyzed related issues including the conditions under which a state must permit a tribe to conduct Class III (i.e., casino-type) gaming operations; sovereign and tribal immunity under IGRA; methods under which a tribe can establish gaming rights if a state refuses to negotiate a gaming compact; enforcement of prohibitions against such gaming; and whether a tribe may enter into a gaming compact with a state outside IGRA's procedures. Gates counsels tribal and government entities on disputes involving Indian law and administrative decisions from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Sara advises and supports tribal clients on complex matters involving tribal sovereignty & governance, government-to-government relations and business and economic development which includes gaming, energy, conventional and bond financing, and tax analysis. She has drafted and reviewed tribal governing documents and intergovernmental agreements; assisted with the federal land acquisition process (aka fee-to-trust) for gaming and non-gaming projects; advised on other Indian lands issues including land claims, leasing and rights-of-way and Section 81 approval requirements; advised tribal clients regarding labor and employment matters; and represented tribal clients in Indian Child Welfare Act matters. Matt regularly counsels tribal governments and tribally-owned businesses on environmental and land use issues affecting Indian country. He also advises a variety of stakeholders on matters related to the protection of indigenous cultural and historic resources. The firm's experts draw on their extensive experience and strong commitment to tribal self-governance and self-determination to provide clients with legal services of the highest caliber on matters as diverse as fee-to-trust, governance, gaming, finance, environmental, cultural resources, labor, and litigation. Christian helps public and private clients navigate the complex and nuanced interactions between federal, state, and tribal law to build healthy, equitable, thriving communities. The unique relationship between tribal law and tribal sovereignty and federal and state law poses special opportunities and challenges for tribes, tribal members, and tribal businesses. Christian assists tribal governments in questions of tribal sovereignty and governance, and the implications on projects and people in Indian Country. In law school, he assisted in researching climate change mitigation and adaptation on tribal lands and helped initiate a social-entrepreneurial effort to support small-scale renewable energy accessibility on the Navajo Nation.

Navajo Nation Employment Law. On the Navajo Nation the timeline for initiating a grievance against an employer in a dispute may be less than 20 days in some cases, and up to a year in others. It all depends on the Navajo Nation personnel policy manual, the collective bargaining agreement, the Navajo case law that interprets the Navajo Preference in Employment Act (NPEA), and whether or not you're employed by the Navajo Nation. If you're employed by the Navajo Nation, you may be required to file a "step grievance" with the Navajo Department of Personnel Management in order to initiate a Navajo hearing with the Navajo Office of Hearings and Appeals, or OHA, for wrongful termination on the Navajo Nation, or for workplace harassment on the Navajo Nation. Anyone who is being harassed at the workplace or who was suspended, demoted, or terminated from employment or is a member of Navajo Nation personnel should immediately be in contact with a counselor who is licensed by the bar. There is a strict process that must be followed by any Navajo Nation employee who has a personnel grievance and wishes to have a Navajo hearing on the situation, which will be overseen by the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

The Indian Law Practice is recognized as one of the most accomplished in the country. As general counsel for the Southern Ute Indian Tribe for almost fifty years, we have provided the legal support required to make the Tribe one of the leaders in Indian country. Our experienced team of attorneys possesses a deep understanding of all substantive areas of Indian law including: jurisdiction, taxation, land and natural resources, commercial activity, finance, gaming, health care delivery and intergovernmental relations. As lead counsel, we have litigated important cases at all court levels from tribal court to the United States Supreme Court, and we have negotiated historic agreements involving such matters as gaming, taxation, oil and gas administration, utilities, health service, and licensing. Whether dealing with tribal governmental code-drafting or preparation of proposed congressional statutes, we have produced model examples of legislation and regulations for the benefit of tribal constituents. We have also helped develop successful tribal economic diversification and investment outside of Indian country through real estate acquisition and development, energy exploration and production, private equity participation, and financing. Our philosophy promotes tribal self-determination and the acquisition of tribal capacity so that reliance on federal trust supervision becomes increasingly unnecessary.

Lawyers maintain expertise and experience in the wide range of disciplines critical to economic development in Indian country. While their knowledge of core Indian law principles and recent developments is at the highest level, our team includes practitioners who bring specialized expertise applying those principles in finance, land and resource acquisition, employment law, environmental and cultural resource permitting and management, and related fields—in Indian country. In Indian country, every aspect of the law applicable to a project, agreement, or dispute may be different from what applies off-Reservation. Successful development or dispute resolution requires a counsel team with knowledge & experience cutting across the subject matter pertinent to the client. Their Native American law practice is national in scope. The firm has represented clients in matters involving more than 40 tribes in more than 20 states, and is one of a very few firms, nationally, which focuses its Native American law practice primarily on the representation of developers, financial sector participants, utilities, and other businesses and others doing business with tribes or tribal entities, engaged in dispute resolution, or addressing policy issues in Indian country. Their Indian Law professionals have extensive experience representing clients in transactions, permitting, and litigation in "Indian country" throughout the U.S. They have represented businesses, including tribally owned entities, in complex development and financing transactions, such as energy & natural resource development, and concerning taxation, leasing or contracting, & environmental management and permitting. They have handled complex litigation concerning tribal contracts, leases, permits, and regulation & understand the pitfalls that may thwart conventional approaches to litigation in Indian country. They also have represented non-tribal governments in issues concerning state and tribal taxation and regulation. Their Indian Lands and Public Lands lawyers help steer clients through the complexities that may otherwise delay or derail projects. Our Indian law practice encompasses: Business contract negotiation and dispute resolution; Business planning and finance; Business leasing, contracting, and facility siting; Acquiring rights-of-way and access; Analysis of Indian country jurisdictional issues; Indian sovereign immunity issues; Dual taxation issues involving states and tribes or pueblos Environmental planning and compliance, including air quality, solid and hazardous waste management; management of natural resource development operations, including permitting and reclamation issues; Mineral Royalty compliance; Water rights; Employment law and tribal employment rights ordinances; National Environmental Policy Act issues; Cultural resource management compliance; Representation in tribal courts, including Navajo Nation courts. Participation in Indian Law Organizations: Our lawyers participate actively in state and national Indian law organizations, speak and write frequently on Indian law subjects, and have taught classes at the University of New Mexico School of law on related subjects. Our Indian law lawyers have been involved at all levels of the federal and state courts (including the U.S. Supreme Court) and also represent businesses in tribal courts. In addition to Modrall Sperling's pro hac vice representation in various tribal courts, Brian Nichols is a licensed member of the Navajo Nation Bar Association.

Their attorneys have developed expertise in the important area of Indian and Native preference in obtaining governmental and other contracts, subcontracts, and employment opportunities. They have assisted clients in gaining SBA minority small business classifications and in benefiting from the preferences available under the Indian Self-Determination Act and other federal and state legislation. In addition, they have assisted in implementation of client employment preference ordinances and regulations and gaining preferences in local private business projects. Attorneys in the firm have an active practice representing tribes, Native corporations, & Indian businesses & organizations on a wide range of issues before legislative and administrative bodies of both federal and state governments. Each year members of the firm are called upon to develop appropriations and other legislative strategy and testimony for numerous clients. Members of the firm have a working relationship with senators and congressmen, congressional committees, and staff that are involved with Indian issues. Administrative work with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and other federal agencies proceeds throughout the year. Members of the firm provide a wide range of consulting and legal services of a governmental and municipal nature. These services include developing and drafting tribal constitutions, codes and ordinances, and contract work for governmental and municipal purposes such as law and order, environmental protection and control, reservation-wide utility construction, housing project construction, self-governance compacts, assistance to tribal courts, and similar services. Attorneys in the firm have participated as legal advisor and consultant to tribal public works projects, including HUD financed housing projects, public docks, community centers and museums. In addition, members of the firm have assisted tribes and Native organizations in developing their positions as local governments and in preparing them to perform governmental services so as to preempt state jurisdiction. Attorneys in the firm provide the full range of legal services required in preserving, developing, and marketing tribal land rights, water rights, timber rights, mineral rights, and commercial fishing rights. In this regard members of the firm have assisted tribes and Native organizations in developing codes for the protection of natural resources, including land use codes, water use codes, environmental protection codes, & related regulations and policies. Much of the firm's work involves marketing of natural resources, including the development of tribal enterprises, joint venture agreements, and related commercial regulation codes and procedures. This work includes consultation and litigation involving jurisdiction over land, water, and other natural resources and the control, use, and commercial development thereof.

Practice Area: Native American law. Since 1982, I've been practicing law in New Mexico. For 21 years, I worked with a private law firm with offices in Albuquerque and the Navajo Nation and served as managing director. I have been an Assistant Solicitor with the U.S. Department of Interior, and now I work as a sole practitioner. Over the past 30 years I've represented hundreds of individuals in personal injury, family law, and employment cases. I served as school board attorney, general counsel for Indian tribes and counsel for small businesses. I've handled many tort claims against the federal government in the New Mexico and Arizona federal courts. My current areas of interest include litigation in Navajo, federal and state courts and school law, especially charter schools.

Provides representation to Indian tribes in New Mexico, Arizona and Wisconsin. Recognized for their expertise in Indian gaming matters with broad experience of Indian law subjects, including land and water rights, natural resources, economic development, jurisdiction, federal-tribal relations, and others. Since 1988, the firm has played a major role in representation of Indian tribes in New Mexico, and since the early 1990s it has become a leader in tribal representation in AZ and WI. Partners Richard W. Hughes, Eric N. Dahlstrom and Denten D. Robinson are widely recognized for their expertise in Indian gaming matters, and they and many of the firm's associates and support staff have broad experience in virtually the full range of Indian law subjects, including land and water rights, natural resources, economic development, jurisdiction, federal-tribal relations, and others. The firm is currently involved in two general stream adjudications on behalf of tribal clients in New Mexico, numerous tribal land claim and trespass disputes, major negotiations for economic development projects, jurisdictional disputes and many other matters. It provides day-to-day advice to tribal governments on tribal governmental legal issues.

 Due in large part to their successful gaming operations, many Native American tribes have become strong economic and political forces in their regions. We have extensive experience representing Native American tribes and their economic enterprises, in a wide range of transactions and in litigation. The head of our Gaming and Native American practice group has nearly twenty years' experience in all aspects of tribal gaming, including constructing and financing Indian gaming facilities, federal, state, and tribal gaming regulation, internal controls, software licensing, and contractual matters. Our lawyers have negotiated and litigated significant water rights matters, litigated land use matters, negotiated and litigated disputes over gaming compacts, and have been involved in tribal election matters. Although we generally represent Native American tribes or their enterprises, we also advise parties who do business with tribes or tribal enterprises.

Tribal governments and court systems in Arizona and elsewhere are growing rapidly. Tribal economies are diversifying, providing opportunities for commercial and residential development. As a result, commercial and governmental entities increasingly will find themselves interacting with tribal agencies and government officials, tribal corporations and commercial entities, and individual tribal members and landowners. The relationships between Indian tribes and non-Indian entities are subject to a wide variety of tribal legal systems as well as a complex system of federal statutes, regulations, and court decisions. Salmon, Lewis & Weldon lawyers have extensive experience representing governmental and private entities in negotiations and litigation with tribes and tribal entities. Their practice includes work in the following areas: Water Rights a thorough working knowledge of federal and tribal reserved water rights, with decades of combined experience litigating and negotiating tribal water right claims. Rights-of-Way and Easements: Their attorneys understand federal laws and regulations governing rights-of-way and easements on tribal land, with a firm grasp of recent case law and regulatory changes in this area. They have negotiated agreements with tribes and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and understand the unique concerns tribes have in regard to property rights on the reservation. Environmental Law: Our attorneys have been heavily involved in tribal regulation and permitting of major power plants & other facilities on tribal lands, helping clients to negotiate agreements involving tribal agencies, federal and state agencies, other stakeholders, and citizens' groups. Trust Lands: Off-reservation acquisitions of land by tribes are becoming more common and will have significant impacts on local communities and governments for years to come. Their attorneys have been actively involved in the regulatory process governing trust acquisitions and have represented clients in numerous challenges to the acquisition of off-reservation lands.

The Indian law group comprises a team of attorneys dedicated to serving and protecting the interests of tribal governments, Alaska Native villages and corporations, and related business entities. Our team members have extensive experience working with tribes on a wide range of economic development, financial workout, natural and cultural resource protection, environmental regulation and cleanup, and intellectual property matters. Our Indian law team's philosophy encourages moving beyond the traditional attorney-client relationship, to building collaborative partnerships with each of our tribal clients. We function as trusted advisors, determining cost-effective approaches to each legal issue, taking into account the tribal government's or tribal enterprise's broader goals and objectives. We understand the legal and jurisdictional complexities that are unique to Indian Country, and are committed to assisting tribes in economic development and diversification, environmental protection, protection of sovereignty, and preservation of natural and cultural resources. We identify emerging industries and opportunities for economic growth for tribes, particularly in the area of sustainability, including green building and renewable energy development. We strive to advance the interests of our tribal clients through negotiation and consensus, rather than conflict, where possible. However, when the need arises, our litigators are able to provide our clients a strategic advantage, having accumulated the depth of experience and insight necessary to understand the most effective and efficient ways to reach successful resolution.

Specializes in all areas of Tribal and Federal Indian Law. Dedicated to providing legal counsel to tribal governments, departments, agencies, schools, colleges and economic enterprises. Protecting and upholding tribal sovereignty is a fundamental value. The attorneys are skilled negotiators and Indian law experts with longstanding ties to the tribal nations of Arizona, Colorado, Nebraska, New York, South Dakota, and Oklahoma. We have a deep commitment to tribal sovereignty, tribal self-government and tribal self-determination. It is our firm policy that representing parties against Indian nations, even if ethically permitted, is a direct conflict without dedication and commitment to promoting tribal sovereignty, tribal self-determination, and tribal self-governance, and disloyal to our tribal clients. This dedication to tribal sovereignty, tribal self-determination, and tribal self-governance is a cornerstone value upon which the firm is built.

Snell & Wilmer attorneys have been significantly involved in legal issues involving Native American tribes and land throughout the western United States for over 75 years. The Native American tribes and businesses they work with face issues involving sovereign immunity; natural resource and environmental protections; financing and developing hotels, retail centers, casinos and other types of infrastructure and utilities; and a wide range of state and federal regulatory concerns. We have represented a variety of Native American tribes, tribal organizations and Native American-owned enterprises. They have represented casinos and gaming organizations, resorts and recreational businesses, development & management companies, financiers, gaming vendors and others doing business on Indian lands. Our representation has involved both Native American and non-Native American clients in their affairs and transactions, along with Native American tribes throughout the country.
